MANY SIGNERS EVADING NRA, JOHNSON SAYS

BETTER COMPLIANCE MUST AND WILL BE OBTAINED

Washington, Nov. 15. (AP)—Hugh S. Johnson came back from his mid-western swing today voicing a determination to obtain better compliance with blue eagle agreements and codes and announced tonight that, beginning December 12, NRA would conduct public hearings on charges of profiteering.

Johnson told newspapermen he had found compliance conditions "bad" and that steps would have to be taken at once to correct the situation. He took that report to President Roosevelt, when at the luncheon table, he described his findings on a ten day speaking trip that took him from Chicago and Minneapolis as far south as Fort Worth.

The profiteering investigation, at which anybody's complaint that is backed up by suitable evidence will be received, was announced as "purely a fact finding inquiry at which all interested parties will be given ample opportunity for the preparation and presentation of any facts bearing on the subject."

At the hearings individual consumers will have a chance to lodge complaints against retailers, and any of the latter who have grievances against manufacturers likewise will be allowed to do so.

Protect Freedom of Press

Simultaneously, NRA moved today into the differences between labor and employer groups over the construction code a spokesman said that a public hearing would be held Monday over revised copies of the master code for the industry and supplementary compact. Officials said that in the revision many of organized labors objections would be met and others would be left for action after public discussion.

Other NRA developments of the day:

Approval by President Roosevelt of seven codes, including one for the air transport industry.

Virtual decision at NRA that the code for newspapers would contain a clause to protect the press against any infringement of its constitutional right to freedom of expression.

Further postponement of final decision as to how the government would deal with Henry Ford in the light of rulings by J. R. McCarl, the comptroller general, that wherever the Ford company is low bidder for government contracts it should be given the business despite Ford's failure to sign the automobile code.

Discussing his trip, Johnson made clear that conferences he held in every community with NRA representatives and local leaders convinced him that present lax conditions in regard to observance of blue eagle terms could not be allowed to continue.

Until President Roosevelt had made a decision, Johnson was not prepared to say what would be done, but he said compliance would have to be obtained—"and will be."

PRISON SYSTEM REVISION URGED

Abolition of Minimum Terms Advocated by Commission

Lansing, Nov. 15 (AP)—Enactment of legislation to abolish minimum prison terms and confer broader powers on the parole commissioner was recommended today by the state crime commission.

Holding its first meeting under the Democratic administration, the commission voted to urge Governor Comstock to include the matter in his message to an expected second special session of the legislature next year.

Under the suggestion proposed by the commission, criminals would be sentenced to maximum terms only. The parole commissioner would then be given discretion in recommending clemency at the time. The commission suggested examination of inmates by psychiatrists before their release.

"Our idea is to encourage probation, particularly for the youthful offender, whether it be for the commission of a serious or minor crime," Attorney General Patrick H. O'Brien, chairman of the commission said.

The matter has been suggested at other times from various sources. A related subject proposing the creation of a penology commission to sentence convicted criminals will be taken up later by the commission, O'Brien said.

Former Rep. Charles H. Culver, Detroit, George J. Burke, Ann Arbor, and O'Brien were named as a committee to present the maximum sentence recommendations to the governor.

Chairman O'Brien said the commission will study the penalties that the new liquor control law will contain to determine whether they should be modified.

Battle Creek Man Returns With Buck

St. Ignace, Mich., Nov. 15 (AP)—Frank Smoke, Battle Creek, today brought the first buck out of the upper peninsula during the 1933 season, authorities here said.

Smoke got his deer, an eight-point, 150 pound animal, seven miles north of here early today and started south with it a short time later.

From Nov. 10 to 14, inclusive, state authorities said, 5,302 cars carrying 8,651 passengers beside the dirvers were ferled across the Straits of Mackinac to the upper peninsula, yielding a revnue to the state of $8,821.35. This year's fares were half those charged a year ago.

Lansing, Nov. 15 (AP)—State Treasurer Theodore I. Fry today issued his certificate of approval for $18,000 general obligation bonds to be issued by the city of Grand Haven to purchase a city hall site. He also approved $25,000 general obligation bonds for the city of Sandusky for a sewage disposal plant.

The public debt commission approved a $52,000 school refunding bond issue by the public schools of the city of Cadillac.

A request to borrow $88,000 from the school district of the township of Wakefield, Gogebic county, against taxes for the current fiscal year was approved by the state loan board. It also approved a similar request for a $25,000 loan by school district No. 7, city of Dearborn.

3,000 Corporations May Lose Charters

Lansing, Nov. 15 (AP)—Unless they file their annual report, more than 3,000 Michigan corporations may lose their charters, the department of state announced today.

A 1931 law states that if a non-profit corporation is delinquent in filing reports for one year, the charter shall be revoked. Most of the corporations that have failed to file the reports are cemetery associations, clubs, churches, lodges, civic improvement associations and church societies in the smaller cities and villages.

Relief Administration Must Divorce Politics From Task--Roosevelt

Washington, Nov. 15 (AP)—A demand that politics be laid aside and speed be applied to administering relief under the civil works division was voiced before five hundred state and city officials today by President Roosevelt.

Speaking to the crowd that had assembled in the White House, the chief executive said reports had come to him that politics had crept into the administration of relief.

Politics Undesired

"I simply want to tell you that your national government is not trying to gain political advantage one way or another out of the needs of human beings for relief," he said.

"I expect the same spirit from every governor and I expect the same spirit from every mayor and from every relief administrator.

"I want it understood that no person connected with the administration of this $400,000,000 will in any instance ask whether a person needing work is a Republican, a Democrat, a Socialist or anything else.

"Our effort is to put 4,000,000 men back to work in the winter months so that we can honestly say as a nation that this winter will not be like last winter or the winter before."

The president was referring to the civil works plan that already had been outlined to the state and city officials by Harry L. Hopkins, the civil works administrator, and Secretary Ickes, public works administrator. Both Hopkins and Ickes were applauded as they told of the plan they said was designed to hold back poverty and destitution until the $3,300,000,000 public works program could get fully under way.

The officials listened to Hopkins for an hour as he read and then explained the rules under which the plan would operate. At noon regional representatives of the relief administration, with which the civil works division is coupled, explained in more detail the plans for various states at luncheon conferences. Hopkins urged haste in getting under way the projects, all of which he said were to use a maximum of day labor. Ickes called the plan one that would tide the nation over the winter until the public works program, held up by necessary technical work, could get under way.

Haste Is Necessary

Hopkins, too, stressed that politics were to be banned.

"It is unthinkable," he said, after outlining the general policy, "that anyone would think of using any of this money for political purposes or for private or personal gain.

"Haste is necessary if we are going to put 4,000,000 men to work immediately. The state civil works administrations will be federal agents. They will take the oath as federal officials. They will have full authority to approve projects.

"We intend to completely decentralize the civil works administration and put the responsibility entirely on the state civil works administration. Funds will be made available immediately and there will be a federal disbursing officer in each state."

Large building projects such as bridges and public structures will not be undertaken, Hopkins said. These require too much time to get under way and really come under the public works act, he added. The work would be large-

VANDERBILT SON KILLED IN CRASH

Ridgeland, S. C., Nov. 15. (AP)—William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., 26, son of a famous New York family, was killed here today as his automobile, speeding from Miami to New York, struck a fruit truck parked beside the highway.

Erskine Gwynne, relative and companion of Vanderbilt on the trip, suffered only minor injuries, but J. W. Guppy, Vanderbilt's chauffeur, was taken to a Savannah, Ga., hospital in a serious condition. Vanderbilt, officers said, was driving at the time.

Gwynne, who had made his home in Paris for some years, returned to this country recently as representative of a French wine merchant. Guppy was a native of England.

Traveling 75 MPH

Young Vanderbilt, who landed only a week ago at Miami from his father's yacht, was enroute to New York to see his mother. He was thrown clear of the car at the impact, and received injuries which proved fatal a few minutes later at a Ridgeland doctor's office. His body was taken to Savannah to be prepared for its trip northward. Word received here was that his father would meet it in Washington.

Young Vanderbilt's father, who donated the Vanderbilt cup, famous in automobile racing circles of some years ago, is a director of the New York Central railroad. His mother is Mrs. Graham Fair Vanderbilt, from whom his father was divorced in Paris in 1927. Young Vanderbilt lived principally with his mother in New York. His father has remarried.

The young man had not fully recovered from effects of a previous automobile wreck. Only yesterday a bird flew through his windshield at Bunnell, Fla., and flying glass inflicted wounds which required medical attention.

Policeman Q. A. Nettles, who investigated today's wreck, said indications were Vanderbilt's machine was traveling in the neighborhood of 75 miles an hour when the crash occurred.

BLIZZARD SENDS DEER TO COVER

Discouraging Conditions Greet Hunters As Season Opens

St. Ignace, Mich., Nov. 15 (AP)—Discouraging conditions today faced the thousands of hunters who entered the woods on their 15-day quest of deer.

A blizzard which swept over the hardwoods country for the past two days has driven deer into the swamps and obliterated all trails in addition to making progress through the woods dangerous and difficult.

Reports from Gogebic county, which contains some of the best deer country, said that 13 inches of snow have fallen within the past 24-hours and that 25 inches have fallen since Nov. 1.

Because of the closed season in their state many Wisconsin hunters have crossed over into Michigan and augmented the thousands of Michigan nimrods who for the past week have steadily treked across the straits.

Many hunters bound for the upper peninsula have halted at camps south of the straits awaiting a change in the weather. Nevertheless, officials at the straits said the number of hunters who have crossed the straits this year was 30 per cent over the number which crossed at this time in 1932.

Gray of the Michigan state prison here has said he will make a personal investigation of how Robert Swem, Detroti lifer, obtained two prison guns he used in a battle with Toledo police after he escaped last Saturday. Swem is in the prison hospital, recovering from bullet wounds in the legs, suffered when he was recaptured.

Guards Withdrawn From Hart's Home

San Jose, Cal., Nov. 15 (AP)—Foreshadowing possible developments in the apparent kidnaping of Brooke Hart, 22, announcement was made today that guards had been withdrawn from the home of the youth's wealthy father, Alex J. Hart, to permit the supposed abductors to make contact with the family.

Young Hart disappeared last Thursday. That night a telephone call was received from San Francisco demanding $40,000 "if you want to see your son alive again." Whether the family has been in contact since then with the supposed abductors was not disclosed.

U. S.-RUSSIAN PARLEYS GO ON

Negotiations May Not Be Completed Before Friday

BY SAM BLEDSOE
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

Washington, Nov. 15. (AP)—Coincidentally with the resumption of personal conferences today with Maxim Litvinoff, President Roosevelt reported distinct progress toward Russian recognition but set no time for an announcement.

The chief executive indicated the parleys might extend beyond Friday. He added, however, that if the necessary documents had not been signed, sealed and delivered by the time he leaves for Warm Springs, Ga., it would not be a sign that the negotiations had broken down.

Fresh Instructions

The Soviet foreign minister visited Mr. Roosevelt before the latter held his conference with the newspapermen and went to the White House again in the afternoon, remaining a little more than thirty minutes.

The meeting between the president and the Soviet diplomat today was interpreted in official circles as an indication that Moscow was willing for the discussions to be broader in scope than Litvinoff originally had planned.

This government has sought, if possible, to reach an understanding before recognition on subjects the Soviet apparently feels should be dealt with afterwards.

The temporary cessation in the discussions between Mr. Roosevelt and Litvinoff gave the latter an opportunity to lay the American position before his government and to receive fresh instructions.

The optimism of President Roosevelt today indicated the Soviet government was willing to make concessions, on procedure at least if they would help to restore diplomatic relations.

Whether there would be any radical departure by the Russians from the precedents set in other negotiations remained undetermined.

Litvinoff has made no secret of his desire to put relations with the United States on a normal basis. Circles close to his delegation said today he would make any reasonable compromise to reach that end.

Mr. Roosevelt wants among other things a clear understanding about the rights of religious freedom for American citizens in Russia.

The Soviet government takes the position full liberty of worship is accorded now but it was regarded as likely that Russia might give definite assurances to allay the anxiety any religious groups in this country might feel.

Other rights of American citizens in Russia might be similarly stated to avoid future misunderstandings but it was felt there would be no attempt to settle such involved issues as the debt question before recognition.

84 Year Old Hunter Off For Peninsula

Alpena, Mich., Nov. 15 (AP)—There may be younger deer hunters than John Hice, 84 years old, but there are few more enthusiastic ones. Hice tonight was on his way to the upper peninsula and paused here briefly after an all night drive from Sturgis.

"Shucks, I don't need any sleep," Hice said when asked about the all night ride. He first hunted deer in Michigan in 1903, Hice said, and seldom has missed a year since, usually bringing back his buck.

WINTRY GALE TOSSES BOATS AROUND LAKES

TWO MISSING COAST GUARDS SAFE AT ISLAND

(By The Associated Press)

Early winter caught Michigan's lake boats by surprise tonight, forced scores to run for cover in protected harbors, sent several hard aground in the face of a wintry lake gale, and is believed to have caused the loss of at least two lives on the inland waters bordering the state.

The Portage canal coast guard station at Houghton was advised tonight that Coast Guards Theodore Salinen, of Munising, and Arthur Lewis, of Duluth, missing since they set out from Ontonagon in a picket boat Sunday, are safe at Madeline island near Bayfield, Wis. The men reported they had weathered the storm by taking shelter at Michigan island in Lake Superior.

Norwegian Ship Aground

At South Haven, a mile south of the harbor in Lake Michigan, the Norwegian steamer Flake lay hard aground, her nose buried deep in sand some 30 rods offshore. The crew of 17 steadfastly refused to abandon ship when proffer of aid was made several times by coast guard boats. The ship, 255 feet long and loaded with 8,000 bales of plupwood, is not believed in immediate danger, although coast guardsmen reported waves were beating high across the deck. The coast guard cutter Escanaba has been summoned from Menominee to assist in freeing the boat.

Search began for the steel tanker Mexoil, owned by the Great Lakes Transport corporation, Detroit, today, but ended a few hours later when the ship was located at South Manitou island, awaiting a lull in the storm before proceeding to Muskegon. The Mexoil left the Straits of Mackinac Monday and was due in Muskegon on Tuesday.

At Sault Ste. Marie, coast guard officials reported several vessels had hastened to cover in the upper St. Mary's river, but said that vessel traffic seemed normal, although snow flurries and a 10 degrees

LIQUOR SUPPLY TO BE GUARDED

Organization of Federal Corporation Is Being Considered

Washington, Nov. 15. (AP)—Organization of a government corporation to control the liquor supply of the country is among the proposals under consideration in administration circles.

It was made clear that the purpose of such a corporation would be to control the production and supply and to simplify tax collections rather than to control retail sales.

No official would discuss details of the proposal but the administration's intention to secure supervision and control over the source of liquor industry, whether through a federal corporation or through a distiller's code, was regarded as fixed.

Situation Discussed

George N. Peek, the farm administrator, said public hearings would begin soon on a code proposed by distillers to regulate production and distribution of liquor. The distillers inserted a pledge in the proposed code to aid in protecting dry states from the traffic.

Examination of legal ramifications is under way to determine how far such a code could go in giving the government control of the industry between the repeal of the eighteenth amendment, on December 5, and the time that congress enacts new legislation. The administration was represented as leaning toward the code method of exercising federal supervision unless further canvassing disclosed the federal corporation to be more desirable.

The president met for more than an hour today with his cabinet committee on repeal and with members of the ways and means committee of the house; the judiciary committees of both the house and the senate and the finance committee of the senate. The whole repeal situation was canvassed, but no definite decision on any point was reached.

Chairman Harrison of the senate finance committee and Chairman Doughton of the house ways and means committee said after the meeting that they would hold joint hearings to determine the new tax rates. The hearings will be started in December.

GROCERY STORE IS ROBBED HERE

Mrs. James Tolan Held Up by Unmasked Bandit

Apologizing for his act, an unidentified man, described as nice looking and about 28 years of age, held up Mrs. James Tolan at the Tolan grocery store, 403 Ludington street, at 7:45 o'clock last evening at the point of a revolver and escaped with between eight and ten dollars.

The man came into the store and ordered some groceries shortly after Mr. Tolan had gone to bed. Mrs. Tolan was alone in the store at the time and started to make up the grocery order. Before she had completed this job, however, the young man pulled the revolver from his pocket and pointing it at her said "Hand over all the money in the till. Sorry I have to do this but I have a wife and two children to support."

The man took all the money available at the time, estimated between eight and ten dollars, and a couple packs of cigarettes which he had included in the grocery order, and fled, leaving the remainder of the grocery order in the store.

The bandit was not masked and Mrs. Tolan reported to police that she was able to get a good look at the man. She described him as being nice looking, between 28 and 30 years of age, of slender medium build, and wearing a long dark overcoat, blue scarf and a peaked black cap, similar to a railroadman's cap.

Police officials are working on the case.

During the week 814 loans were closed for a total of $1,192,900 compared with 639 and a total of $2,099,600 from January through November, 1932.

WOODIN GIVEN LEAVE TO GET HEALTH BACK

DEAN ACHESON RESIGNS TO MAKE ROOM

BY RICHARD L. TURNER
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

Washington, Nov. 15 (AP)—To administer the nation's finances through the vital period that lies just ahead, President Roosevelt has chosen his neighbor, close friend and trusted personal advisor, Henry Morgenthau, Jr.

On Friday Morgenthau will become the actual, if not titular head of the treasury department, while Secretary Woodin, whose resignation the chief executive declined to accept, takes a leave of absence and goes west in search of rest and health.

To make room for Morgenthau Dean Acheson, youthful undersecretary of the treasury, submitted his resignation, and Mr. Roosevelt accepted it with a word of regret and appreciation for his services.

Supports President

The president announced these changes today to a group of correspondents assembled before his paper laden desk. In a tone of deep feeling, Mr. Roosevelt read in their entirety letters exchanged between himself and Woodni.

"You know that every policy of yours has had and still has my devoted support," the cabinet officer wrote in part, "and I have never doubted that you are the one man that can lead this country out of its difficulty."

This statement was obviously aimed at those who, nevertheless, immediately interpreted the developments as indicating a rift between the president and the secretary, an asserted sound money man, and as a sign that inflation lay ahead.

Those who clung to this view pointed to Morgenthau's close association with Professor George F. Warren, author of the present effort to force commodity prices upward by buying foreign and domestic gold, and a persistent advocate of the so-called commodify dollar, based upon a changeable gold content.

Morgenthau, 42, has been an intimate advisor of the president principally on agricultural problems since the period just before Mr. Roosevelt became governor of New York. Then the now chief executive made him chairman of a committee appointed to guide him on farm legislation.

After assuming office in Albany, Mr. Roosevelt chose Morgenthau as his conservation commissioner. Throughout the 1932 campaign, he was the principal Roosevelt agricultural advisor. There was much talk of his becoming secretary of agriculture Instead, Mr. Roosevelt made him head of the farm credit administration.

Born in New York

His work in this office has been highly praised. That it was done to the complete satisfaction of the president was evidenced by today's developments.

Morgenthau was born in New York City but spent much of his boyhood in Texas because of poor health. Returning to New York he bought a farm in Dutchess county not far from Mr. Roosevelt's Hyde Park home. Soon there began a friendship that has continued through years of personal and political ups and downs.

From Nov. 10 to 14, inclusive, state authorities said, 5,302 cars carrying 8,651 passengers beside the dirvers were ferled across the Straits of Mackinac to the upper peninsula, yielding a revnue to the state of $8,821.35. This year's fares were half those charged a year ago.

Chicago, Nov. 15 (AP)—Fred W. Sargent, president of the Chicago & North Western railway, said today that the road covered fixed charges in October with $100,000 to spare. Gross was up about $200,000 from last year while net operating income showed an increase of around $300,000. The road expects a good movement of grain during the rest of November. Its freight traffic so far this month has run about 18 per cent above last year.

Relief Administration Must Divorce Politics From Task--Roosevelt

Washington, Nov. 15 (AP)—A demand that politics be laid aside and speed be applied to administering relief under the civil works division was voiced before five hundred state and city officials today by President Roosevelt.

Speaking to the crowd that had assembled in the White House, the chief executive said reports had come to him that politics had crept into the administration of relief.

Politics Undesired

"I simply want to tell you that your national government is not trying to gain political advantage one way or another out of the needs of human beings for relief," he said.

"I expect the same spirit from every governor and I expect the same spirit from every mayor and from every relief administrator.

"I want it understood that no person connected with the administration of this $400,000,000 will in any instance ask whether a person needing work is a Republican, a Democrat, a Socialist or anything else.

"Our effort is to put 4,000,000 men back to work in the winter months so that we can honestly say as a nation that this winter will not be like last winter or the winter before."

The president was referring to the civil works plan that already had been outlined to the state and city officials by Harry L. Hopkins, the civil works administrator, and Secretary Ickes, public works administrator. Both Hopkins and Ickes were applauded as they told of the plan they said was designed to hold back poverty and destitution until the $3,300,000,000 public works program could get fully under way.

The officials listened to Hopkins for an hour as he read and then explained the rules under which the plan would operate. At noon regional representatives of the relief administration, with which the civil works division is coupled, explained in more detail the plans for various states at luncheon conferences. Hopkins urged haste in getting under way the projects, all of which he said were to use a maximum of day labor. Ickes called the plan one that would tide the nation over the winter until the public works program, held up by necessary technical work, could get under way.

Haste Is Necessary

Hopkins, too, stressed that politics were to be banned.

"It is unthinkable," he said, after outlining the general policy, "that anyone would think of using any of this money for political purposes or for private or personal gain.

"Haste is necessary if we are going to put 4,000,000 men to work immediately. The state civil works administrations will be federal agents. They will take the oath as federal officials. They will have full authority to approve projects.

"We intend to completely decentralize the civil works administration and put the responsibility entirely on the state civil works administration. Funds will be made available immediately and there will be a federal disbursing officer in each state."

Large building projects such as bridges and public structures will not be undertaken, Hopkins said. These require too much time to get under way and really come under the public works act, he added. The work would be large-

VANDERBILT SON KILLED IN CRASH

Ridgeland, S. C., Nov. 15. (AP)—William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., 26, son of a famous New York family, was killed here today as his automobile, speeding from Miami to New York, struck a fruit truck parked beside the highway.

Erskine Gwynne, relative and companion of Vanderbilt on the trip, suffered only minor injuries, but J. W. Guppy, Vanderbilt's chauffeur, was taken to a Savannah, Ga., hospital in a serious condition. Vanderbilt, officers said, was driving at the time.

Gwynne, who had made his home in Paris for some years, returned to this country recently as representative of a French wine merchant. Guppy was a native of England.

Traveling 75 MPH

Young Vanderbilt, who landed only a week ago at Miami from his father's yacht, was enroute to New York to see his mother. He was thrown clear of the car at the impact, and received injuries which proved fatal a few minutes later at a Ridgeland doctor's office. His body was taken to Savannah to be prepared for its trip northward. Word received here was that his father would meet it in Washington.

Young Vanderbilt's father, who donated the Vanderbilt cup, famous in automobile racing circles of some years ago, is a director of the New York Central railroad. His mother is Mrs. Graham Fair Vanderbilt, from whom his father was divorced in Paris in 1927. Young Vanderbilt lived principally with his mother in New York. His father has remarried.

The young man had not fully recovered from effects of a previous automobile wreck. Only yesterday a bird flew through his windshield at Bunnell, Fla., and flying glass inflicted wounds which required medical attention.

Policeman Q. A. Nettles, who investigated today's wreck, said indications were Vanderbilt's machine was traveling in the neighborhood of 75 miles an hour when the crash occurred.

BLIZZARD SENDS DEER TO COVER

Discouraging Conditions Greet Hunters As Season Opens

St. Ignace, Mich., Nov. 15 (AP)—Discouraging conditions today faced the thousands of hunters who entered the woods on their 15-day quest of deer.

A blizzard which swept over the hardwoods country for the past two days has driven deer into the swamps and obliterated all trails in addition to making progress through the woods dangerous and difficult.

Reports from Gogebic county, which contains some of the best deer country, said that 13 inches of snow have fallen within the past 24-hours and that 25 inches have fallen since Nov. 1.

Because of the closed season in their state many Wisconsin hunters have crossed over into Michigan and augmented the thousands of Michigan nimrods who for the past week have steadily treked across the straits.

Many hunters bound for the upper peninsula have halted at camps south of the straits awaiting a change in the weather. Nevertheless, officials at the straits said the number of hunters who have crossed the straits this year was 30 per cent over the number which crossed at this time in 1932.

Supplementary Aid For Schools Sought

Grand Rapids, Mich., Nov. 15. (AP)—The Michigan league of women voters concluded its annual convention here today with the adoption of a resolution calling on Governor Comstock to include in the matters considered by the special legislative session some form of supplementary state aid for schools.

Mrs. Paul W. Jones, of Grand Rapids, was elected president for this year; Mrs. Hugh Neale, Mt. Clemens, vice president, and Mrs. L. DeCamp Averill, Grand Rapids, secretary and treasurer. The convention voted to revise the administrative system by eliminating five of the six vice presidents.

Milwaukee Paying Christmas Clubs

Milwaukee, Wis., Nov. 15. (AP)—Twenty-eight Milwaukee banks have started paying out $1,395,000 to 31,500 depositors, A. G. Casper, cashier of the First National Bank, said today. While the amount was under the payments made in the two previous years, Casper said club depositors had demonstrated remarkable confidence through the March banking holiday.

Jackson, Mich., Nov. 15 (AP)—Warden Peter F. Gray of the Michigan state prison here has said he will make a personal investigation of how Robert Swem, Detroti lifer, obtained two prison guns he used in a battle with Toledo police after he escaped last Saturday. Swem is in the prison hospital, recovering from bullet wounds in the legs, suffered when he was recaptured.

Guards Withdrawn From Hart's Home

San Jose, Cal., Nov. 15 (AP)—Foreshadowing possible developments in the apparent kidnaping of Brooke Hart, 22, announcement was made today that guards had been withdrawn from the home of the youth's wealthy father, Alex J. Hart, to permit the supposed abductors to make contact with the family.

Young Hart disappeared last Thursday. That night a telephone call was received from San Francisco demanding $40,000 "if you want to see your son alive again." Whether the family has been in contact since then with the supposed abductors was not disclosed.

U. S.-RUSSIAN PARLEYS GO ON

Negotiations May Not Be Completed Before Friday

BY SAM BLEDSOE
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

Washington, Nov. 15. (AP)—Coincidentally with the resumption of personal conferences today with Maxim Litvinoff, President Roosevelt reported distinct progress toward Russian recognition but set no time for an announcement.

The chief executive indicated the parleys might extend beyond Friday. He added, however, that if the necessary documents had not been signed, sealed and delivered by the time he leaves for Warm Springs, Ga., it would not be a sign that the negotiations had broken down.

Fresh Instructions

The Soviet foreign minister visited Mr. Roosevelt before the latter held his conference with the newspapermen and went to the White House again in the afternoon, remaining a little more than thirty minutes.

The meeting between the president and the Soviet diplomat today was interpreted in official circles as an indication that Moscow was willing for the discussions to be broader in scope than Litvinoff originally had planned.

This government has sought, if possible, to reach an understanding before recognition on subjects the Soviet apparently feels should be dealt with afterwards.

The temporary cessation in the discussions between Mr. Roosevelt and Litvinoff gave the latter an opportunity to lay the American position before his government and to receive fresh instructions.

The optimism of President Roosevelt today indicated the Soviet government was willing to make concessions, on procedure at least if they would help to restore diplomatic relations.

Whether there would be any radical departure by the Russians from the precedents set in other negotiations remained undetermined.

Litvinoff has made no secret of his desire to put relations with the United States on a normal basis. Circles close to his delegation said today he would make any reasonable compromise to reach that end.

Mr. Roosevelt wants among other things a clear understanding about the rights of religious freedom for American citizens in Russia.

The Soviet government takes the position full liberty of worship is accorded now but it was regarded as likely that Russia might give definite assurances to allay the anxiety any religious groups in this country might feel.

Other rights of American citizens in Russia might be similarly stated to avoid future misunderstandings but it was felt there would be no attempt to settle such involved issues as the debt question before recognition.

84 Year Old Hunter Off For Peninsula

Alpena, Mich., Nov. 15 (AP)—There may be younger deer hunters than John Hice, 84 years old, but there are few more enthusiastic ones. Hice tonight was on his way to the upper peninsula and paused here briefly after an all night drive from Sturgis.

"Shucks, I don't need any sleep," Hice said when asked about the all night ride. He first hunted deer in Michigan in 1903, Hice said, and seldom has missed a year since, usually bringing back his buck.

WINTRY GALE TOSSES BOATS AROUND LAKES

TWO MISSING COAST GUARDS SAFE AT ISLAND

(By The Associated Press)

Early winter caught Michigan's lake boats by surprise tonight, forced scores to run for cover in protected harbors, sent several hard aground in the face of a wintry lake gale, and is believed to have caused the loss of at least two lives on the inland waters bordering the state.

The Portage canal coast guard station at Houghton was advised tonight that Coast Guards Theodore Salinen, of Munising, and Arthur Lewis, of Duluth, missing since they set out from Ontonagon in a picket boat Sunday, are safe at Madeline island near Bayfield, Wis. The men reported they had weathered the storm by taking shelter at Michigan island in Lake Superior.

Norwegian Ship Aground

At South Haven, a mile south of the harbor in Lake Michigan, the Norwegian steamer Flake lay hard aground, her nose buried deep in sand some 30 rods offshore. The crew of 17 steadfastly refused to abandon ship when proffer of aid was made several times by coast guard boats. The ship, 255 feet long and loaded with 8,000 bales of plupwood, is not believed in immediate danger, although coast guardsmen reported waves were beating high across the deck. The coast guard cutter Escanaba has been summoned from Menominee to assist in freeing the boat.

Search began for the steel tanker Mexoil, owned by the Great Lakes Transport corporation, Detroit, today, but ended a few hours later when the ship was located at South Manitou island, awaiting a lull in the storm before proceeding to Muskegon. The Mexoil left the Straits of Mackinac Monday and was due in Muskegon on Tuesday.

At Sault Ste. Marie, coast guard officials reported several vessels had hastened to cover in the upper St. Mary's river, but said that vessel traffic seemed normal, although snow flurries and a 10 degrees

LIQUOR SUPPLY TO BE GUARDED

Organization of Federal Corporation Is Being Considered

Washington, Nov. 15. (AP)—Organization of a government corporation to control the liquor supply of the country is among the proposals under consideration in administration circles.

It was made clear that the purpose of such a corporation would be to control the production and supply and to simplify tax collections rather than to control retail sales.

No official would discuss details of the proposal but the administration's intention to secure supervision and control over the source of liquor industry, whether through a federal corporation or through a distiller's code, was regarded as fixed.

Situation Discussed

George N. Peek, the farm administrator, said public hearings would begin soon on a code proposed by distillers to regulate production and distribution of liquor. The distillers inserted a pledge in the proposed code to aid in protecting dry states from the traffic.

Examination of legal ramifications is under way to determine how far such a code could go in giving the government control of the industry between the repeal of the eighteenth amendment, on December 5, and the time that congress enacts new legislation. The administration was represented as leaning toward the code method of exercising federal supervision unless further canvassing disclosed the federal corporation to be more desirable.

The president met for more than an hour today with his cabinet committee on repeal and with members of the ways and means committee of the house; the judiciary committees of both the house and the senate and the finance committee of the senate. The whole repeal situation was canvassed, but no definite decision on any point was reached.

Chairman Harrison of the senate finance committee and Chairma Doughton of the house ways and means committee said after the meeting that they would hold joint hearings to determine the new tax rates. The hearings will be started in December.

GROCERY STORE IS ROBBED HERE

Mrs. James Tolan Held Up by Unmasked Bandit

Apologizing for his act, an unidentified man, described as nice looking and about 28 years of age, held up Mrs. James Tolan at the Tolan grocery store, 403 Ludington street, at 7:45 o'clock last evening at the point of a revolver and escaped with between eight and ten dollars.

The man came into the store and ordered some groceries shortly after Mr. Tolan had gone to bed. Mrs. Tolan was alone in the store at the time and started to make up the grocery order. Before she had completed this job, however, the young man pulled the revolver from his pocket and pointing it at her said "Hand over all the money in the till. Sorry I have to do this but I have a wife and two children to support."

The man took all the money available at the time, estimated between eight and ten dollars, and a couple packs of cigarettes which he had included in the grocery order, and fled, leaving the remainder of the grocery order in the store.

The bandit was not masked and Mrs. Tolan reported to police that she was able to get a good look at the man. She described him as being nice looking, between 28 and 30 years of age, of slender medium build, and wearing a long dark overcoat, blue scarf and a peaked black cap, similar to a railroadman's cap.

Police officials are working on the case.

Land Bank Loans Are Speeded Up

St. Paul, Nov. 15. (AP)—More loans were made to farmers by the Federal Land Bank here during the week ending November 11 than during the first ten months last year.

But even more speed in aiding agrarians in Minnesota, Wisconsin, North Dakota and Michigan is planned, Leo T. Crowley, general agent for the Farm Credit administration, said today.

During the week 814 loans were closed for a total of $1,192,900 compared with 639 and a total of $2,099,600 from January through November, 1932.

WOODIN GIVEN LEAVE TO GET HEALTH BACK

BY RICHARD L. TURNER
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

Washington, Nov. 15 (AP)—To administer the nation's finances through the vital period that lies just ahead, President Roosevelt has chosen his neighbor, close friend and trusted personal advisor, Henry Morgenthau, Jr.

On Friday Morgenthau will become the actual, if not titular head of the treasury department, while Secretary Woodin, whose resignation the chief executive declined to accept, takes a leave of absence and goes west in search of rest and health.

To make room for Morgenthau, Dean Acheson, youthful undersecretary of the treasury, submitted his resignation, and Mr. Roosevelt accepted it with a word of regret and appreciation for his services.

Supports President

The president announced these changes today to a group of correspondents assembled before his paper laden desk. In a tone of deep feeling, Mr. Roosevelt read in their entirety letters exchanged between himself and Woodni.

"You know that every policy of yours has had and still has my devoted support," the cabinet officer wrote in part, "and I have never doubted that you are the one man that can lead this country out of its difficulty."

This statement was obviously aimed at those who, nevertheless, immediately interpreted the developments as indicating a rift between the president and the secretary, an asserted sound money man, and as a sign that inflation lay ahead.

Those who clung to this view pointed to Morgenthau's close association with Professor George F. Warren, author of the present effort to force commodity prices upward by buying foreign and domestic gold, and a persistent advocate of the so-called commodity dollar, based upon a changeable gold content.

Morgenthau, 42, has been an intimate advisor of the president principally on agricultural problems since the period just before Mr. Roosevelt became governor of New York. Then the now chief executive made him chairman of a committee appointed to guide him on farm legislation.

After assuming office in Albany, Mr. Roosevelt chose Morgenthau as his conservation commissioner. Throughout the 1932 campaign, he was the principal Roosevelt agricultural advisor. There was much talk of his becoming secretary of agriculture. Instead, Mr. Roosevelt made him head of the farm credit administration.

Born in New York

His work in this office has been highly praised. That it was done to the complete satisfaction of the president was evidenced by today's developments.

Morgenthau was born in New York City but spent much of his boyhood in Texas because of poor health. Returning to New York he bought a farm in Dutchess county not far from Mr. Roosevelt's Hyde Park home. Soon there began a friendship that has continued through years of personal and political ups and downs.

GOLD HISTORY IN U. P. TOLD

Ropes Mine at Ishpeming Was Started Back in 1882

Setting forth the checkered history of men's search for gold in the hills and creeks of our own state of Michigan, William Bates, student metallurgist and prospector, addressed the mining students of Michigan Tech at a recent meeting held in the college clubhouse.

Bates was one of a crew from Tech that carried out veining, trenching and assaying work last summer at the Michigan gold mine near Ishpeming. He has also searched for the yellow metal in the Huron mountains and in the Yellow Dog sands.

In his talk he said that the Michigan gold mine at Ishpeming, which is resuming operations, represents another attempt to develop the known gold resources of Michigan.

The occurrence of gold in Michigan, as far as is known, was first noted by Douglas Houghton, then state geologist, who did so much work in the Copper Country prior to 1840. While on a trip overland from Marquette to the Copper Country, Houghton and his party camped for several days in the Huron mountains. A crow's quill full of grains of placer gold, brought into camp by Houghton, was the first gold known to have been found in the upper peninsula.

Douglas Houghton was drowned shortly afterward off Eagle Harbar, and the first episode in the history of gold in Michigan was soon forgotten. The members of the party who knew of the occurrence of gold in this section made no further attempt to improve their knowledge, as the search for copper was of more importance at the time.

Until 1880, no attempt was made to make Michigan a gold producer. In that year, however, Julius Ropes, an Ishpeming druggist, discovered gold about five miles north of that city.

Ropes, whose hobby was geology, brought in several fine specimens of free gold and made the first recorded assays of ore from the Ishpeming deposits. In 1882 the Ropes Gold Mining company was organized and operations were started.

A shaft which finally reached a depth of 900 feet was sunk, and a small stamp mill erected. A second mill was built soon afterward, and a total of 65 heads of gravity stamps was in operation. The free gold in the ore was recovered by plate amalgamation, and the gold-bearing sulphides were concentrated by vanners. Those concentrates were shipped for smelting. The ore averaged from $6 to $8 a ton in gold, with some silver, and the tailings from the mill assayed from $1 to $3.

The history of the Ropes mine is one of lack of capital and inefficient metaauulrgy. In 1897 the mine ceased operations and has lain idle since. Soon after the closing of the mine the property was bought by the Carrigan-McKiney Steel company, who cleared up the old amalgamation plates and the vanners. This work netted them more than enough to pay for the cost of the property.

In 1890, gold was discovered about 3½ miles west of the Ropes property. A company was formed to exploit this discovery, and two forties of land were taken up. Operations consisted mainly of removing six inches to two feet of overburden from the numerous veins of the property, and trenching the veins to a depth of four to ten feet. The best specimens of visible gold formed the only output of this operation, the rest of the material being discarded. Two shafts, one 53 and the other 85 feet deep, were also sunk, but little development was done. The inefficient methods in use rendered any chance of profits impossible, and operations soon ceased.

Several years later a small mill was built, and a Huntingan grinder installed. But again poor management and inflicient processes doomed the enterprise to early failure.

In 1914 the Copps interests of Milwaukee bought the property and mined quartz for a time. The presence of sulphides, however, lowered the value of the product to such an extent that operations could not be made profitable.

This represents the history of gold mining in the upper peninsula up to the spring of 1933, when the Michigan Gold Mines, Inc., was organized for the purpose of reopening the Michigan gold mine. In a period of six months this company has built a headframe, has installed mining and milling equipment, and is ready to commence operations. The headframe was constructed over the old 53 foot shaft, which has been de-watered and put into readiness for operation.

The mill flow-sheet embodies primary breaking by a jaw crusher and secondary grinding by a six inch by 36 inch Hardinge mill. The recovery of the free gold will be effected by concentration on Corduray blankets, a simple but effective process which has gained much favor in recent years. The blanket concentrates will be treated by barrel amalgamation for the recovery of the gold. The auriferous sulphides in the ore will be concentrated on Wilfley tables. A cyanidation plant to treat these concentrates is planned.

The gold in ore occurs in quartz veins in a country rock of diorite, with some porphyry. The quartz veins are from a few inches to two or three feet in width. The quartz veins are about 70 per cent free milling gold, the remainder being locked in the sulphide minerals. The sulphides compare about three per cent of the total bulk of the vein material. Sulphide materials noted include pyrite, galena, molybdenite, and chalcopyrite. Small amounts of native copper are also found. The free gold occurs in pockets in the veins three of which are in the early operations yielded a total of $17,700 in gold. The quartz assays on an average of about $8.50 in gold, with little silver.

In conclusion, the blame for failures in the attempts to produce gold in this country must be shared by poor management, inefficient processes, and the concentration of mining capital on the development of iron and copper resources of the state. With careful management and improved methods there seems no reason why gold mining could not be conducted in the Ishpeming district on a small but profitable scale.

Welfare Discussed At B&PW Meeting

Newberry, Nov. 15—Welfare was the general subject of the dinner meeting held on Tuesday night by the Business & Professional Woman's club in the community building dining room. Two guest speakers, Miss Alma Howell of the Crippled Children's Commission and Walter Berry, field worker for the emergency relief commission were the speakers.

Mr. Berry had this as his first opportunity to tell of the work of the federal and state relief agencies to a public group in Luce county, his visits here before having to do with officials, work only. The history of relief during the emergency of the past few years, the application of the various relief acts to localities and to persons, were the two main divisions of his talk. "Each state must help itself, each county must, each town and each person. Only after all other resources have been exhausted can the community come to the help of the person, the state to the county or the federal government to the state," Mr. Berry stated.

His explanation of the duties of the recently appointed relief commission were received with interest. "We have made progress which we had thought would take at least 50 years in the last few weeks," he stated, "in the uniform relief set up for every county in the United States. We can know what conditions are and what we can do about them, a thing we have never known before." The speaker pointed out that this system made it possible to give help to those who really need and to place upon their own resources those who could help themselves.

The work of the poor commission and other relief workers before the uniform set up was established was warmly praised by Mr. Berry. "They did a difficult job and they did it the best it could be done under the old conditions," he said.

Handicapped Children

Miss Howell told of the work in the peninsula for the handicapped children. Presenting a map of the U. P. in which each crippled or handicapped child which has been reported to the organization is marked with a colored pin, Miss Howell told of several of the children and what is being done for them. In her talk she also stressed the fact that some of these families can help the child without assistance from the organizations. Others must be prodded to make it possible for anyone to get help to them, especially those living in isolated homes. Others are ready and willing but have no means and it is to this latter group that the greatest help can be extended and to whom the greatest good comes.

The meeting was opened by the president, Kathleen Gormely who turned it over to the chairman of the program committee, Esther Ojala. Each guest, representing the various organizations having welfare work or in a position to help in it, were introduced to the group. Dinner music was furnished by the high school orchestra which had been trained by Arthur Neu. The group played beautifully for more than a half hour. Mr. Neu sang two numbers, "Sylvia" and "Little Town in the Old Country Down."

FORESTRY MEN GET RECREATION

Camp Escanaba Barracks Nearly Ready; Bids Asked on Hall

Gwinn, Mich., Nov. 15—A recreation hall 30 by 60 feet has been authorized for all C. C. C. camps in the Sixth Corps Area, according to instructions received by Capt. J. W. Bollenbeck, commanding Camp Escanaba. Camp commanders have been authorized to advertise at once for bids. Capt. Bollenbeck announced today that bids for the recreation hall as well as for winter-proofing the 30 by 97 foot rustic mess hall would be opened by him at Camp Escanaba on November 25 at 2 p. m. In camps located in national forests, a garage 22 by 130 feet has been authorized. In state camps, the garages will be erected by the state.

The construction of a recreation hall will be a tremendous factor in maintaining a better state of morale among the men. Most of the companies are located so far from any center of recreation that the camps practically must be self-sufficient as regards recreation and amusement. The size of the hall will permit basketball, indoor baseball, and volley ball. The halls will be electrically illuminated, current either being brought in from neighboring towns, or provided by plants to be set up in the camp.

Capt. Bollenbeck on Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock will open bids for the construction of a bathhouse 20 by 46 feet, a septic tank, a grease trap and a four-car heated garage.

Progress on the winter quarters of Camp Escanaba is such that two barracks will be occupied Wednesday. Work is being rushed by F. E. Wester, Marquette contractor, by the J. and H. Electric company of Marquette, and by the tinners. Heating stoves are awaited any day from Tennessee, as is the electric generator. These items are being provided by the army after direct purchases from the manufacturer.

In Camp Escanaba tents are still occupied and the men are in fine spirits despite the fact that water freezes every night inside the tents.

Coasting Accident

Marquette—The first coasting accident of the season was reported to Marquette police yesterday, the victim being in St. Mary's hospital suffering a broken left arm and a further warning was issued to parents to keep their children from coasting on sidewalks and use only the streets of the city designated for that purpose.

The victim is Nicholas Tibor, 63 years old, of 203 North Fourth street. According to the story told police he was walking down Fourth street, between Bluff and Washington streets, when he was struck by a sled ridden by Bobby Sandeline, eight years old.

Anti-Sludge Motor Oil

Change Now!

They pour at sub-zero temperatures... Give easier starting... Yet could be used with perfect safety in mid-summer. Will not sludge. Now ready at all Standard Stations

Get set for the easiest starting winter you've ever experienced. At all Standard Stations you'll now find two new winter grades of Iso-Vis "D" Anti-Sludge Motor Oil—10-W and 20-W. These new grades not only meet the latest recommendations of car manufacturers for winter motor oils, but 20-W pours at 5° below zero, and 10-W pours at 20° below zero. At those temperatures these oils let your motor turn over easily—give positive lubrication instantly. And you don't need to worry about these oils thinning out dangerously under the heat of driving. They are so little affected by high temperatures that they could be used with perfect safety in your motor on the hottest summer day, though they would give somewhat higher consumption in hot weather. Because these new oils do not sludge you will get just as quick, positive circulation of lubricant in your motor at the end of 1000 miles as when you first put them in your crankcase.

CAR MANUFACTURERS RECOMMEND NEW GRADES OF MOTOR OIL

After thorough study of common causes of difficulty in winter starting, motor car manufacturers have found, through investigations sponsored by the Society of Automotive Engineers, that most people use too heavy oil in winter, and that there is great variation in the starting characteristics of winter grade oils. They, therefore, recommend the use of two new grades for winter to be known as 10-W and 20-W, both of which are to have very definite viscosity specifications for starting at low temperatures.

You Needn't Wait Drain—Refill Now

Don't get caught with heavy summer oil in your crankcase. Drain and refill now with the new winter grade Iso-Vis "D". You'll be safe if the weather turns cold—you'll get perfect lubrication even if the temperature rises.

GOLD HISTORY IN U. P. TOLD

Ropes Mine at Ishpeming Was Started Back in 1882

Setting forth the checkered history of men's search for gold in the hills and creeks of our own state of Michigan, William Bates, student metallurgist and prospector, addressed the mining students of Michigan Tech at a recent meeting held in the college clubhouse.

Bates was one of a crew from Tech that carried out veining, trenching and assaying work last summer at the Michigan gold mine near Ishpeming. He has also searched for the yellow metal in the Huron mountains and in the Yellow Dog sands.

In his talk he said that the Michigan gold mine at Ishpeming, which is resuming operations, represents another attempt to develop the known gold resources of Michigan.

The occurrence of gold in Michigan, as far as is known, was first noted by Douglas Houghton, then state geologist, who did so much work in the Copper Country prior to 1840. While on a trip overland from Marquette to the Copper Country, Houghton and his party camped for several days in the Huron mountains. A crow's quill full of grains of placer gold, brought into camp by Houghton, was the first gold known to have been found in the upper peninsula.

Douglas Houghton was drowned shortly afterward off Eagle Harbar, and the first episode in the history of gold in Michigan was soon forgotten. The members of the party who knew of the occurrence of gold in this section made no further attempt to improve their knowledge, as the search for copper was of more importance at the time.

Until 1880, no attempt was made to make Michigan a gold producer. In that year, however, Julius Ropes, an Ishpeming druggist, discovered gold about five miles north of that city.

Ropes, whose hobby was geology, brought in several fine specimens of free gold and made the first recorded assays of ore from the Ishpeming deposits. In 1882 the Ropes Gold Mining company was organized and operations were started.

A shaft which finally reached a depth of 900 feet was sunk, and a small stamp mill erected. A second mill was built soon afterward, and a total of 65 heads of gravity stamps was in operation. The free gold in the ore was recovered by plate amalgamation, and the gold-bearing sulphides were concentrated by vanners. Those concentrates were shipped for smelting. The ore averaged from $6 to $8 a ton in gold, with some silver, and the tailings from the mill assayed from $1 to $3.

The history of the Ropes mine is one of lack of capital and inefficient metaunlrgy. In 1897 the mine ceased operations and has lain idle since. Soon after the closing of the mine the property was bought by the Carrigan-McKiney Steel company, who cleared up the old amalgamation plates and the vanners. This work netted them more than enough to pay for the cost of the property.

In 1890, gold was discovered about 3½ miles west of the Ropes property. A company was formed to exploit this discovery, and two forties of land were taken up. Operations consisted mainly of removing six inches to two feet of overburden from the numerous veins of the property, and trenching the veins to a depth of four to ten feet. The best specimens of visible gold formed the only output of this operation, the rest of the material being discarded. Two shafts, one 53 and the other 85 feet deep, were also sunk, but little development was done. The inefficient methods in use rendered any chance of profits impossible, and operations soon ceased.

Several years later a small mill was built, and a Huntingan grinder installed. But again poor management and inficient processes doomed the enterprise to early failure.

In 1914 the Copps interests of Milwaukee bought the property and mined quartz for a time. The presence of sulphides, however, lowered the value of the product to such an extent that operations could not be made profitable.

This represents the history of gold mining in the upper peninsula up to the spring of 1933, when the Michigan Gold Mines, Inc., was organized for the purpose of reopening the Michigan gold mine. In a period of six months this company has built a headframe, has installed mining and milling equipment, and is ready to commence operations. The headframe was constructed over the old 53-foot shaft, which has been de-watered and put into readiness for operation.

The mill flow-sheet embodies primary breaking by a jaw crusher and secondary grinding by a six inch by 36 inch Hardinge mill. The recovery of the free gold will be effected by concentration on Corduray blankets, a simple but effective process which has gained much favor in recent years. The blanket concentrates will be treated by barrel amalgamation for the recovery of the gold. The auriferous sulphides in the ore will be concentrated on Wilfley tables. A cyanidation plant to treat these concentrates is planned.

The gold in ore occurs in quartz veins in a country rock of diorite, with some porphyry. The quartz veins are from a few inches to two or three feet in width. The quartz veins are about 70 per cent free milling gold, the remainder being locked in the sulphide minerals. The sulphides compare about three per cent of the total bulk of the vein material. Sulphide materials noted include pyrite, galena, molybdenite, and chalcopyrite. Small amounts of native copper are also found. The free gold occurs in pockets in the veins three of which are in the early operations yielded a total of $17,700 in gold. The quartz assays on an average of about $8.50 in gold, with little silver.

In conclusion, the blame for failures in the attempts to produce gold in this country must be shared by poor management, inefficient processes, and the concentration of mining capital on the development of iron and copper resources of the state. With careful management and improved methods there seems no reason why gold mining could not be conducted in the Ishpeming district on a small but profitable scale.

Welfare Discussed At B&PW Meeting

Newberry, Nov. 15—Welfare was the general subject of the dinner meeting held on Tuesday night by the Business & Professional Woman's club in the community building dining room. Two guest speakers, Miss Alma Howell of the Crippled Children's Commission and Walter Berry, field worker for the emergency relief commission were the speakers.

Mr. Berry had this as his first opportunity to tell of the work of the federal and state relief agencies to a public group in Luce county, his visits here before having to do with officials, work only. The history of relief during the emergency of the past few years, the application of the various relief acts to localities and to persons, were the two main divisions of his talk. "Each state must help itself, each county must, each town and each person. Only after all other resources have been exhausted can the community come to the help of the person, the state to the county or the federal government to the state," Mr. Berry stated.

His explanation of the duties of the recently appointed relief commission were received with interest. "We have made progress which we had thought would take at least 50 years in the last few weeks," he stated, "in the uniform relief set up for every county in the United States. We can know what conditions are and what we can do about them, a thing we have never known before." The speaker pointed out that this system made it possible to give help to those who really need and to place upon their own resources those who could help themselves.

The work of the poor commission and other relief workers before the uniform set up was established was warmly praised by Mr. Berry. "They did a difficult job and they did it the best it could be done under the old conditions," he said.

Handicapped Children

Miss Howell told of the work in the peninsula for the handicapped children. Presenting a map of the U. P. in which each crippled or handicapped child which has been reported to the organization is marked with a colored pin, Miss Howell told of several of the children and what is being done for them. In her talk she also stressed the fact that some of these families can help the child without assistance from the organizations. Others must be prodded to make it possible for anyone to get help to them, especially those living in isolated homes. Others are ready and willing but have no means and it is to this latter group that the greatest help can be extended and to whom the greatest good comes.

The meeting was opened by the president, Kathleen Gormely who turned it over to the chairman of the program committee, Esther Ojala. Each guest, representing the various organizations having welfare work or in a position to help in it, were introduced to the group. Dinner music was furnished by the high school orchestra which had been trained by Arthur Neu. The group played beautifully for more than a half hour. Mr. Neu sang two numbers, "Sylvia" and "Little Town in the Old Country Down."

CONRAD MANN GIVEN PARDON

Serves Four Hours of 5 Month Term for Lottery Case

New York, Nov. 15 (AP)—Conrad H. Mann, president of the Kansas City chamber of commerce, walked out of the federal house of detention tonight after serving only four hours of his 5-month sentence for violation of lottery laws.

President Roosevelt pardoned him late in the afternoon, but it was two hours before the federal red tape could be severed and Mann could be freed from the prison on Manhattan's waterfront.

Surrounded by U. S. marshals and attorneys, Mann stepped through the door of the government prison to the sidewalk of West street where a bleak wind howled up from the sea. His eyes were tear-filled and his hands shook as he accepted the congratulations of the little group waiting for him.

"There's little I can say—very little—only that I'm deeply grateful to President Roosevelt," said the Missouri business leader who once served as a member of former President Hoover's unemployment commission.

Release Delayed

Mann posed for photographers on the sidewalk before the prison, turned and waived a jovial goodbye to the night guard at the gate—a different man from the prisoner who, four hours before, was described by his attorney as "all broken up" at the surrender.

Mann's release was delayed two hours because the guards at the house of detention did not answer their telephone. Louis Mead Treadwell, young government prosecutor of the Kansas City business leader on lottery charges growing out of affairs conducted by the Fraterial Order of Eagles, spent an hour trying to reach the jail and finally sent a messenger boy there to rouse the guards.

Treadwell was informed of the pardon by Attorney General Homer S. Cummings and ordered to effect Mann's release as soon as possible. After a messenger boy informed the guards of the pardon Mulligan and several other marshals were admitted to witness the signing of a formal acceptance of his pardon and a guarantee to pay a $10,000 fine before Dec. 30. Mann knew nothing of the pardon until the marshals arrived.

Mutual Savings Banks Recommended

Lansing, Nov. 15 (AP)—Governor Comstock today decided to recommend enactment of a statute providing for the creation of mutual savings banks to the approaching special session of the legislature.

The governor was urged to include the subject in his message to the legislature by Rep. William M. Donnelly, Democrat, Detroit, author of a mutual savings bank bill in the last session. The measure died in the senate.

Donnelly believes formation of mutual banks will bring millions of dollars out of hiding. In such institutions, depositors would hold all the stock with profits and losses distributed pro rata. Depositors would also pick the directors. The mutual savings system has worked successfully in Massachusetts for years.

Football Games In Detroit Cancelled

Detroit, Nov. 15 (AP)—Ten high school football games scheduled in Detroit for the coming week end have been called off because of cold weather and others may be cancelled in the next few days. High school officials said that continued cold weather would result in the ending of the season for most high school squads in Detroit.

treasury at the outset of the administration had charge of the department through the banking crisis. His friendship with Mr. Roosevelt, always deeply personal, was even further closely cemented during this period.

The first strain upon that tie found Mr. Roosevelt standing stunchly by his cabinet officer. The senate banking investigation disclosed that Woodin's name appeared on several of the J. P. Morgan lists of preferred customers, all of them before the former had come into the cabinet. Mr. Roosevelt's answer was to take the secretary with him as his guest on a week-end cruise the following Saturday.

Resignation rumors persisted, nevertheless, based largely on reports that the two were at odds on matters of monetary policy and the fact that illness was keeping Woodin away from his desk for weeks at a time.

With pressure from the inflationists both in and out of congress constantly growing, close observers were predicting that sooner or later the two would inevitably come to a parting of the ways.

Woodin's view on inflation was well known. He once answered a question as to his view of the problem by quietly and smilingly drawing from a vest pocket a five billion mark note from the post war days in Germany.

The rumors of this disagreement and resignation always were promptly denied. Only a few days ago, Woodin called newspapermen to his desk and asserted that he was supporting the president "to the limit" he added:

In his letter submitting his resignation the secretary addressed the president by the title which which is now history but is nevertheless still used by his intimates, that of "governor." The president repleid with a "dear Will."

Needs Complete Rest

Woodin recalled in his letter that after his illness in August he discussed with the president whether because of his health he should resign, and that Mr. Roosevelt had advised that he stay away from the treasury for a few weeks and forget his duties there, in the interest of regaining his health.

"Unfortunately, I am not exactly built that way," he continued, 'and it has been impossible for me, on account of the great responsibility I feel, to refrain from being almost as active in the affairs of the department when away as when I was actually at my desk.

"I have tried faithfully to carry out their suggestions but it has been a failure, as evidenced by the relapse which I have just suffered. Therefore, I feel that I must tender my resignation and seek complete rest and a change of climate. My physicians have told me that unless I do this, they will not be responsible for the outcome.

"I cannot express the intense regret I feel in writing you this letter. I have been so happy in serving you, and if I only could continue I would be the most grateful of all people. You will know that every policy of yours has had and still has my devoted support, and I have never doubted that you are the one man that can lead this country out of its difficulties."

In reply, Mr. Roosevelt asserted that the "first consideration" was Woodin's "complete recuperation." He asked that the cabinet officer take a complete leave of absence," saying it was his hope and belief that in a few months Woodin once more would be "able to give the government the fine unselfish service which all of us in Washington so greatly appreciated." He added:

"We need you back again, and the country needs you back again.

"For this reason, I am going to ask you to withhold your resignation; to take a complete leave of absence and to do all you can to get full health and strength, without any responsibility or thought of work.

"I hope that you will do this for me because of my own personal affectionate regard for you and because of the very great services which you have given to our country during a critical period of our history. While you are away I can well appoint someone with government and financial experience to be acting secretary."

After the president's announcement was made, Woodin called in newspapermen to say goodbye. He cheerfully outlined his plans, saying he would be in Washington a day or so longer, then go to New York for a short time, and a little later journey to Tucson, Arizona.

"It wrenches me to tear away from here," he said.

GRANGE MEETS AT BOISE, IDA.

Federal Farm Policy Is Criticized, Defended at Gathering

Boise, Idaho, Nov. 15 (AP)—Criticism and defense of the administration's measures for ending the economic and agricultural depression were voiced at the opening session here today of the National Grange's ten-day convention.

Louis J. Taber of Columbus, O., master of the Grange, found some fault with the NRA and demanded "the sensible common ground of controlled inflation and managed currency."

Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, in a telegram to the Grange master, defended his crop curtailment program and George N. Peek, administrator of the agricultural adjustment act, declared it "offers promise for the realization of the principle of equality for agriculture."

Situation Acute

With many hundred Grangers here for the opening session and enough more expected to overtax the city's capacity for hospitality, Mr. Taber declared the convention "the most important the Grange has ever had in view of the acute agricultural situation."

"The situation is indeed acute," he added, "and the views of this organization on the question undoubtedly will carry influence."

To the convention the white-haired Grange master and dairyman said:

"Never in past generations has there been a time in American history where team work, cooperation and group action under the right leadership were more essential than at the present hour."

He described the Industrial Recovery Act as "a bold and new attempt to apply new and far-reaching methods to the solution of our difficulty."

"The NRA has been of value in some of the ends sought," he said, "but it has failed to accomplish all the results hoped for.

"There has been too much dictation and too much regimentation. The smaller communities and rural areas have not benefited to the same extent as some of the larger centers. While whole-hearted support should be given the undertaking, yet weaknesses and failures must be pointed out, and all urged to help to complete the entire program in harmony with American ideals and our constitutional form of government."

Secretary Wallace wired:

"We must continue to push with the greatest vigor possible our present retreat from surplus acres and surplus toil. Soon we must make up our minds whether to stay nationalistic, become international or adopt a planned program somewhere between."

Cities and counties were called upon to put up some of the money to be spent. Where this is not possible, Hopkins said, the federal money should all be allotted for civil works projects and the city and county money used for direct relief, taking over as much as possible of the work of providing for the 1,000,000 families that still will be on the relief rolls.

Minimum wages were set at 40 cents an hour for common labor and $1.00 for skilled labor in the southern zone; 45 cents and $1.10 in the middle zone, and 50 cents and $1.20 in the northern zone which includes Michigan.

ALLOTMENT BASIS

Washington, Nov. 15 (AP)—A basis for alloting the $400,000,000 civil works fund was announced tonight by Harry L. Hopkins, administrator of the newly formed organization.

Asserting that "unemployment follows population" Hopkins said the administration proposed to allot the jobs to be created 75 percent according to population and 25 percent unemployment or relief needs.

He said the administration had tentatively allotted on a population basis 3,000,000 of the 4,000,000 jobs which it proposes to create.

Nobody Worthy Of Nobel Peace Prize

Oslo, Norway, Nov. 15 (AP)—The Nobel peace prize went begging this year, it was learned today, because the storting (parliament) committee empowered to make the award decided no statesman in the world had achieved anything worthy of the honor.

Many candidates were proposed, but the committee found that 1933 was lacking a deserving enterprise in the cause of peace.

Its actual negotiations and voting were secret, under the laws and by-laws of the foundation established by Alfred Bernhard Nobel.

Since no peace prize was awarded in 1932, two prizes were at the disposal of the storting's committee of five. One of these will be added to a special fund and the other will remain for disposition with next year's award.

In past years Theodore Roosevet, Elihu Root, Woodrow Wilson and Charles G. Dawes have been among those receiving the award.

JURY CONVICTS GREAT LAWYER

Isador Kresel Guilty of Aiding Misapplication of Bank Funds

New York, Nov. 15 (AP)—Isador J. Kresel, renowned criminal lawyer, was convicted today on charges growing out of the collapse of the Bank of United States.

The diminutive Kresel, director and counsel to the bank, was the third man to be pronounced guilty of aiding in misapplication of funds. Bernard K. Marcus, former president, and Sault Singer, former vice president, are serving terms in Sing Sing prison.

The attorney was convicted by a supreme court jury of aiding and abetting in the misapplication of $2,009,518 of the funds of an affiliate of the institution.

Kresel, whose intimate knowledge of the law has whisked many a defendant from the shadows of prison, faces a maximum term of seven years imprisonment—his brilliant and colorful career as a lawyer ended if his conviction is upheld by the appelate courts.

Without emotion Kresel heard the jury declare him guilty—a jury that had listened to former Governor Alfred E. Smith, Samuel Seabury and others testify to his good character. John W. Davis, Democratic presidential nominee in 1924, had headed his staff of defense counsel.

Kresel, who in 1930 crusaded with Seabury against corruption in the magistrate's courts, was allowed his liberty on $100,000 bail, pending appeal. Marcus and Singer had been committed to the Tombs as soon as they were convicted.

Freedom Of Press To Be Preserved

Washington, Nov. 15 (AP)—A reservation to guarantee the constitutional right of freedom of the press tonight appeared definitely scheduled for inclusion in the code for newspaper publishers.

NRA officials were not ready to make a formal announcement, but with the return of Hugh S. Johnson from the speaking tour on which he announced that nothing would be done by NRA to impair press freedom, it became clear that objections to the reservation demanded by the American Newspaper Publishers association probably would be withdrawn.

Remaining to be determined, however, was whether the administration would accept the language offered by the A. N. P. A., or propose a differently phrased code clause.

Johnson, in his Chicago speech ten days ago, announced as an official interpretation of the industrial law that the power to license industries could not be invoked in regard to newspapers because of the constitutional guaranty of freedom of the press.

The steamer D. E. Callender, with a crew of 25, was beached off Long Point, Ont., yesterday, although the crew and vessel were believed in no danger. The freighter J. E. Schoellkopf, driven ashore off Menominee, was freed Tuesday, while the canal barge Schuyler, aground at Menominee for nearly two weeks, was abandoned to the waves.

Inland, where snow and wind caused traffic accidents and made travel dangerous on frozen highways, residents looked for even colder weather tonight, although clearing skies were reported from many localities. Off Mt. Clemens, Mich., search still went on for two duck hunters who disappeared last week. Their overturned canoe was found floating in Lake St. Clair, and army airplanes were searching the lake for the bodies.

FEAR FOR CREW OF SHIP AT SEA

Men Abandoning British Freighter Saxilby on North Atlantic

Valentia, Irish Free State, Nov. 15. (AP)—The fate of the little British freighter Saxilby, whose crew of 27 was reported to be abandoning ship in a raging north Atlantic storm, was hidden tonight as at least six ships raced to her rescue.

The 52,000 ton Berengaria seemed likely to be the winner, but that great liner was forced to reduce her speed and did not expect to reach the scene before Thursday morning.

Wireless messages received close to midnight from officers aboard the Berengaria held out little hope that any of the Saxilby's crew ever would be found alive.

The messages stated the big Cunarder was doing its utmost in violent sets to reach the Saxilby's last indicated position.

A dispatch from the Berengaria's staff captain, quoted in the London Herald, said "We are just jogging along in fearful weather and have heard nothing from the Saxilby since 10 a. m. We are terribly anxious and haven't much hope of reaching her in time.

"It will be a grave job to discover a small ship's boat in these fierce seas, but we are determined to push on, searching until we can search no more."

Another British freighter, the steamship St. Quentin, lost her steering gear in the same storm and tonight was wallowing helplessly not far from the Saxilby, about 300 miles off the Irish coast. The St. Quentin's situation was not critical, however.

The Saxilby's wireless had been silent since morning, when her position was given as 51:50 north, 19:50 west.

The wife of the St. Quentin's captain, Mrs. Daisy Perie, and their four-year-old child were aboard that vessel.

The British steamer Manchester Regiment, 92 miles from the Saxilby, in a wireless message tonight said the Saxilby "does not answer repeated calls; making very little headway in mountainous seas; whole gale."

CONRAD MANN GIVEN PARDON

Serves Four Hours of 5 Month Term for Lottery Case

New York, Nov. 15 (AP)—Conrad H. Mann, president of the Kansas City chamber of commerce, walked out of the federal house of detention tonight after serving only four hours of his 5-month sentence for violation of lottery laws.

President Roosevelt pardoned him late in the afternoon, but it was two hours before the federal red tape could be severed and Mann could be freed from the prison on Manhattan's waterfront.

Surrounded by U. S. marshals and attorneys, Mann stepped through the door of the government prison to the sidewalk of West street where a bleak wind howled up from the sea. His eyes were tear-filled and his hands shook as he accepted the congratulations of the little group waiting for him.

"There's little I can say—very little—only that I'm deeply grateful to President Roosevelt," said the Missouri business leader who once served as a member of former President Hoover's unemployment commission.

Release Delayed

Mann posed for photographers on the sidewalk before the prison, turned and waived a jovial goodbye to the night guard at the gate—a different man from the prisoner who, four hours before, was described by his attorney as "all broken up" at the surrender.

Mann's release was delayed two hours because the guards at the house of detention did not answer their telephone. Louis Mead Treadwell, young government prosecutor of the Kansas City business leader on lottery charges growing out of affairs conducted by the Fraterial Order of Eagles, spent an hour trying to reach the jail and finally sent a messenger boy there to rouse the guards.

Treadwell was informed of the pardon by Attorney General Homer S. Cummings and ordered to effect Mann's release as soon as possible. After a messenger boy informed the guards of the pardon Mulligan and several other marshals were admitted to witness the signing of a formal acceptance of his pardon and a guarantee to pay a $10,000 fine before Dec. 30. Mann knew nothing of the pardon until the marshals arrived.

Mutual Savings Banks Recommended

Lansing, Nov. 15 (AP)—Governor Comstock today decided to recommend enactment of a statute providing for the creation of mutual savings banks to the approaching special session of the legislature.

The governor was urged to include the subject in his message to the legislature by Rep. William M. Donnelly, Democrat, Detroit, author of a mutual savings bank bill in the last session. The measure died in the senate.

Donnelly believes formation of mutual banks will bring millions of dollars out of hiding. In such institutions, depositors would hold all the stock with profits and losses distributed pro rata. Depositors would also pick the directors. The mutual savings system has worked successfully in Massachusetts for years.

Football Games In Detroit Cancelled

Detroit, Nov. 15 (AP)—Ten high school football games scheduled in Detroit for the coming week end have been called off because of cold weather and others may be cancelled in the next few days. WOODIN GIVEN LEAVE TO GET HEALTH BACK treasury at the outset of the administration had charge of the department through the banking crisis. His friendship with Mr. Roosevelt, always deeply personal, was even further closely cemented during this period.

The first strain upon that tie found Mr. Roosevelt standing stunchly by his cabinet officer. The senate banking investigation disclosed that Woodin's name appeared on several of the J. P. Morgan lists of preferred customers, all of them before the former had come into the cabinet. Mr. Roosevelt's answer was to take the secretary with him as his guest on a week-end cruise the following Saturday.

Resignation rumors persisted, nevertheless, based largely on reports that the two were at odds on matters of monetary policy and the fact that illness was keeping Woodin away from his desk for weeks at a time.

With pressure from the inflationists both in and out of congress constantly growing, close observers were predicting that sooner or later the two would inevitably come to a parting of the ways.

Woodin's view on inflation was well known. He once answered a question as to his view of the problem by quietly and smilingly drawing from a vest pocket a five billion mark note from the post war days in Germany.

The rumors of this disagreement and resignation always were promptly denied. Only a few days ago, Woodin called newspapermen to his desk and asserted that he was supporting the president "to the limit" he added:

In his letter submitting his resignation the secretary addressed the president by the title which which is now history but is nevertheless still used by his intimates, that of "governor." The president repleid with a "dear Will."

Needs Complete Rest

Woodin recalled in his letter that after his illness in August he discussed with the president whether because of his health he should resign, and that Mr. Roosevelt had advised that he stay away from the treasury for a few weeks and forget his duties there, in the interest of regaining his health.

"Unfortunately, I am not exactly built that way," he continued, 'and it has been impossible for me, on account of the great responsibility I feel, to refrain from being almost as active in the affairs of the department when away as when I was actually at my desk.

"I have tried faithfully to carry out their suggestions but it has been a failure, as evidenced by the relapse which I have just suffered. Therefore, I feel that I must tender my resignation and seek complete rest and a change of climate. My physicians have told me that unless I do this, they will not be responsible for the outcome.

"I cannot express the intense regret I feel in writing you this letter. I have been so happy in serving you, and if I only could continue I would be the most grateful of all people. You will know that every policy of yours has had and still has my devoted support, and I have never doubted that you are the one man that can lead this country out of its difficulties."

In reply, Mr. Roosevelt asserted that the "first consideration" was Woodin's "complete recuperation." He asked that the cabinet officer take a complete leave of absence," saying it was his hope and belief that in a few months Woodin once more would be "able to give the government the fine unselfish service which all of us in Washington so greatly appreciated." He added:

"We need you back again, and the country needs you back again.

"For this reason, I am going to ask you to withhold your resignation; to take a complete leave of absence and to do all you can to get full health and strength, without any responsibility or thought of work.

"I hope that you will do this for me because of my own personal affectionate regard for you and because of the very great services which you have given to our country during a crtical period of our history. While you are away I can well appoint someone with government and financial experience to be acting secretary."

After the president's announcement was made, Woodin called in newspapermen to say goodbye. He cheerfully outlined his plans, saying he would be in Washington a day or so longer, then go to New York for a short time, and a little later journey to Tucson, Arizona.

"It wrenches me to tear away from here," he said.

Many Applying For Old Age Pensions

Detroit, Nov. 15 (AP)—Application blanks for those applying for old age pensions will be mailed to many persons who applied for pensions today at the Detroit branch office of the state highway department and found that blanks sent from Lansing had failed to arrive.

Before the day was well under way the branch office was filled to overflowing by persons 70 years old or over who decided to wait until the blanks arrived. Officials in the office then took the names and addresses of those seeking pensions and are taking steps to mail them the necessary forms.

The steamer D. E. Callender, with a crew of 25, was beached off Long Point, Ont., yesterday, although the crew and vessel were believed in no danger. The freighter J. E. Schoellkopf, driven ashore off Menominee, was freed Tuesday, while the canal barge Schuyler, aground at Menominee for nearly two weeks, was abandoned to the waves.

Inland, where snow and wind caused traffic accidents and made travel dangerous on frozen highways, residents looked for even colder weather tonight, although clearing skies were reported from many localities. Off Mt. Clemens, Mich., search still went on for two duck hunters who disappeared last week. Their overturned canoe was found floating in Lake St. Clair, and army airplanes were searching the lake for the bodies.

FEAR FOR CREW OF SHIP AT SEA

Valentia, Irish Free State, Nov. 15. (AP)—The fate of the little British freighter Saxilby, whose crew of 27 was reported to be abandoning ship in a raging north Atlantic storm, was hidden tonight as at least six ships raced to her rescue.

The 52,000 ton Berengaria seemed likely to be the winner, but that great liner was forced to reduce her speed and did not expect to reach the scene before Thursday morning.

Wireless messages received close to midnight from officers aboard the Berengaria held out little hope that any of the Saxilby's crew ever would be found alive.

The messages stated the big Cunarder was doing its utmost in violent sets to reach the Saxilby's last indicated position.

A dispatch from the Berengaria's staff captain, quoted in the London Herald, said "We are just jogging along in fearful weather and have heard nothing from the Saxilby since 10 a. m. We are terribly anxious and haven't much hope of reaching her in time.

"It will be a grave job to discover a small ship's boat in these fierce seas, but we are determined to push on, searching until we can search no more."

Another British freighter, the steamship St. Quentin, lost her steering gear in the same storm and tonight was wallowing helplessly not far from the Saxilby, about 300 miles off the Irish coast. The St. Quentin's situation was not critical, however.

The Saxilby's wireless had been silent since morning, when her position was given as 51:50 north, 19:50 west.

The wife of the St. Quentin's captain, Mrs. Daisy Perie, and their four-year-old child were aboard that vessel.

The British steamer Manchester Regiment, 92 miles from the Saxilby, in a wireless message tonight said the Saxilby "does not answer repeated calls; making very little headway in mountainous seas; whole gale."

FAVORS PROTECTION

CONGRESSMAN Prentiss M. Brown, speaking at Menominee on Tuesday, pledged that he would exert all possible effort toward securing favorable protection of the paper and sugar industries of the upper peninsula.

The congressman remarked that it might appear paradoxical for a Democrat, like himself, to advocate tariff protection, in view of his party's stand on this important issue for many years past. He expressed the opinion, however, that the Democratic party had been committed to a change from its traditional policy during the 1928 campaign when Alfred E. Smith sought the presidency.

Reopening of the beet sugar factory at Menominee has been of considerable benefit this year to the people of the upper peninsula. In addition to more than three hundred persons given work at the factory this fall, farmers in Menominee, Delta and other counties have found sugar beets to be a good cash crop. Merchants in Bark River and Escanaba noticed the difference when the farmers received their checks last week.

Protection for American newsprint and pulp requires action by Congress. There never has been a tariff on these products, mainly because the larger newspaper publishers of the country have been powerful enough to forestall such a move. Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, national recovery administrator, rejected the plea of newsprint manufacturers recently that the price be pegged at a figure, which would allow a reasonable profit and permit the American industry to continue in business. President Roosevelt, however, has indicated that he desires to help this country's newsprint producers.

The upper peninsula is interested in the protection of the paper and pulp industry because of its three mills, employing directly about a thousand men at Groos, Munising and Manistique. In addition, there are hundreds of farmers and small jobbers, who realize much benefit in the producing of one or more carloads of pulpwood each season.

PRIVATE HUNTING GROUNDS

THE I. Stephenson company introduces a sort of an innovation in offering a 40-acre piece of cutover land in good game country to the hunter who shoots the largest buck during the present hunting season. The winner of the prize will have an ideal site for a hunting camp.

The interest that has been aroused by the offer would seem to indicate that private hunting grounds are highly desirable. Upper peninsula lumbering companies and the conservation department report that in recent years there has been increased demand for such property.

In lower Michigan, all the choice hunting lands are posted. In some instances, farmers derive an appreciable amount of revenue from the selling of hunting privileges, while other tracts are maintained by sportsmen simply for enjoyment by themselves and their friends.

Very likely the same situation will develop in the upper peninsula. This is a large territory, but the fact must not be overlooked that more people are also taking up the pastime of hunting deer and smaller game. Sportsmen from throughout the middle west are coming north to the upper peninsula to enjoy the great outdoors. Becoming enamoured with this country, they are gradually acquiring ownership to tracts of land fronting lakes and streams for the establishment of summer homes and hunting camps.

There is no reason why encouragement should not be given to this movement. These sportsmen come up and spend money at our gas stations and stores; some pay caretakers to protect their places; and also in some instances they remove lands from the delinquent tax rolls.

C. C. C. IN WINTER

SOME doubt has been expressed that the boys of the Civilian Conservation Corps will enjoy spending the winter in upper peninsula camps. A goodly proportion of the youths come from lower Michigan, where the weather is not generally as severe as in this northern section.

Capt. Joseph W. Bollenbeck, commander of the Gwinn camp, reports his civilian foresters are becoming acclimated to this country. The captain is relying much on a continuance of the camp recreational program to keep them amused and satisfied.

With summer sports off the calendar, Capt. Bollenbeck is now making preparations for an extensive winter recreational program. The Gwinn country abounds with hills, lakes and woods. Toboggan slides, hockey and skating rinks are contemplated. With the appropriation the government allows for recreational expense, a number of skates, hockey sticks, skiis and toboggans will be secured for the C. C. C. boys.

It is highly probable that the C. C. C. program will give increased impetus to the movement to make winter sports more popular in this ideal region. The hockey game, in particular, may have a chance to grow.

MINORS ARE BARRED

No boys or girls under 18 years of age may be employed as waiters or entertainers in places where beer is sold on the premises, according to the commission's latest of a large number of rulings. Determined to be non-intoxicating by Congress, the 3.2 per cent beer is now being attached with an odium that takes it out of the soft drink class. Minors may work in confectionery and drug stores, where pop and other non-intoxicating drinks are dispensed, but not in beer establishments.

Is this an admission by the liquor control commission that beer parlors are not really nice places?

FROM POLITICS TO ECONOMICS

THERE is something deeply interesting about the reorganization of the governmental structure which Mussolini is reported to be preparing for Italy.

Instead of a Chamber of Deputies, it is said, Italy will have a sort of parliament containing delegates representing commerce, agriculture, and industry throughout the country, grouped in some 50 "guilds." Political representation practically will cease, to be replaced by economic representation.

It is worth remembering that someone ironically suggested this for the United States a generation ago, urging that we have senators representing coal, iron, corn, wheat, oil, and so on. And the idea really isn't altogether silly. It will be interesting to see what Mussolini does with it.

THWARTING JUSTICE

IF YOU would like to know about one of the dodges which enable crooks to escape punishment for their misdeeds, consider the plight of Mrs. Clara Alt of Chicago.

Mrs. Alt's home was burglarized in 1928. Twenty times since then Mrs. Alt has gone to court prepared to testify against the men who have been charged with the crime; and each time the case has been continued, so that Mrs. Alt has had the fun of going to the courthouse 20 times for nothing.

The other day a new hearing was scheduled. Mrs. Alt was on a women's committee to welcome Mrs. Roosevelt to the World's Fair, so she didn't go to court. She was sent for and fined $10 for staying away.

If you can think of any system of court procedure better calculated to help the crook defeat justice, there are plenty of slippery lawyers who would be very glad to hear from you.

HOMES WORSE THAN JAILS

ONE of the most shocking disclosures of recent weeks is the story of the women textile workers in Alabama who refused to leave the jail where they had been confined because it was more comfortable than their own homes.

These women—arrested after an outburst of violence in connection with a cotton mill strike at Mobile—were offered their freedom on bond and turned it down.

"We have running hot water in jail for baths, which beats heating water in a tin pail and washing in a laundry tub all hollow," one of them explained.

When you reflect on what a dismal place the ordinary county jail is, and then reflect further on the fact that even such accommodations seemed to these women preferable to their own homes; you get an appalling glimpse at the living conditions with which some American citizens must put up.

The Unknown Blond

(By NEA Service) BY LAURA LOU BROOKMAN

BEGIN HERE TODAY

On a stormy November evening DAVID BANNISTER meets a pretty blond girl and offers her a lift in the cab in which he is riding. Her handbag opens and he sees a revolver inside.

Next morning Bannister reads that TRACY KING, orchestra leader in a movie theater, has been found dead in his apartment. Police are searching for an "unknown blond" who visited King the night before. Bannister, remembering the girl in the taxicab, is puzzled.

He sees her again that morning. The girl tells him her name is JULIET FRANCE and that she knows nothing of the murder. She begs Bannister to help her and he agrees.

He goes to see his old friend, JIM PAXTON, editor of the Tremont Post.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER VI

Jim Paxton's face lighted as he saw the figure in the doorway. "Hello there!" he exclaimed. "Glad you came around." Paxton put aside the cigar he had been chewing and leaned back in his chair. "Lord" he sighed. "What a morning!"

Banister sauntered to a chair beside the editor's desk. The desk itself was piled high with a litter of newspapers, galley proofs, large manilla envelopes and a stack of letters that had not been opened.

"How much did you lose last night?" Bannister demanded.

"Oh, it isn't that. I followed your example and went home early," Paxton assured him, "but I've been down here since six o'clock. That blasted murder last night hit us in a bad way. The Times had all the best of it, of course, coming out this morning. Did a good job, too."

The Times was Tremont's only morning newspaper but the same publishers issued the evening News-Press. Against such opposition the Post had prospered but it was a continuous fight.

"It hit us in a bad way," Paxton repeated. "Kennedy, the city editor, is laid up in a hospital and his assistant is a new one. Only been on the job two months. Besides that," he frowned, raising his two hands in a gesture of defenselessness, "we're short-handed. One man off on a late vacation and another quit without notice. There are a couple of youngsters filling in but they don't know what it's all about!"

"What's new on the murder?" Bannister asked.

"Nothing—apparently. I guess they're still looking for the mysterious blond. More promises that they'll have her at headquarters 'within 24 hours.' Say, it's a whale of a story, isn't it? You don't know what a sensation that crooning orchestra leader has been in this town! Girls and women all crazy about him. Sending him letters and cakes and all sorts of presents. Asking for autographed pictures. Why, our telephone operator's eyes are red and swollen and they say one of the girls in the business office has been crying half the morning—"

"Must have been popular," Bannister agreed shortly.

"Popular's no word for it! And then there's the society angle—his engagement to Denise Lang, the richest girl in Tremont. Why, it's the sort of story that doesn't break once in five years and," bitterly, "we don't even start on it before the Times has cleaned up!"

"I wouldn't say it was cleaned up," Bannister commented. "Not until they find out who killed him."

"Oh, no, of course I didn't mean that. But the Times had the whole story all anyone's been able to get so far. If Kennedy were only here or I had two more reporters—!"

• • •

Bannister had been sitting with his chair tipped back. He brought the two front legs of the chair to the floor now, straightened and said quietly, "You want more reporters, do you? Well, I'll take the job."

"You'll take it!"

Bannister nodded. "I'd like to take a fling at it," he said. "Remember what we were talking about last night—about the thrills and excitement we used to have? Well, I'm bored. I've been bored for months. Haven't a thing to do with myself or my time. Here a cracking good murder breaks and I'll like to get in on it. Maybe it's because I'm back in Tremont—"

"Why, Lord love you, Dave! You don't mean you want to be a reporter on the Post again, do you?"

"Why not?" Bannister was talking eagerly now. "I'd like to find out who killed Tracy King—and why. Oh, I don't suppose I'll be much help to you! Probably I'm stale; been out of harness too long. But I can do leg work. I'd like to be on the inside of a murder story once more and see the wheels go around. I used to have a pretty good standing with McNeal and I'll bet I still know half the force—"

"Go to it!" Paxton told him curtly. "There was never a better police reporter in Tremont than you were, Dave. Maybe you'll get some ideas you can use in a novel."

"Yes, and maybe I'll get my neck broken." Suddenly Dave Banister grinned. "This is going to be fun! Going to be—" He stopped. "There's one thing," he said, "I don't want to cut in on any of your boys. I mean whoever is handling the story. Your man can write all the by-line stories. All I want to do is work with him. Whatever I get I'll turn over to him to write—"

• • •

Ten minutes later Paxton and Bannister were in the city room—the same large, square city room, scarcely changed, where Bannister had worked years before. The city desk was set at a different angle. Banister recognized none of the men gathered around it. Desks and cabinets covered most of the floor space. They had been rearranged, too, but the room had the same air of activity, of disorder and preoccupation that he remembered. From beyond came the muffled roaring and whining and grinding of machines. Oh, it was all quite familiar.

But the faces of the men and women about the room were different. Paxton strode a few steps forward, then called, "Oh—Gain-

Neil Gallagher is in receipt of a message that a steamer has been found ashore on Caribou Island, in Lake Superior and there is a possibility the vessel is the Henry B. Smith, aboard which his son-in-law, John Gallagher, is engaged as assistant engineer. Until the identity of the vessel is established the fate of the Escanaba man will continue in doubt.

A daughter has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Fred Moreau.

The body of Chris Keenan of Menominee, one of the members of the crew of seven people who perished aboard the barge Plymouth, when it went down off Gull Island, in Lake Michigan, has been washed ashore at Manistee, 75 miles from the scene of the wreck.

That James McDonald, of Beechwood formerly of this city, was not shot by a hunter before he was killed by a North Western train near that place last week, is the belief of most of the residents of the Beechwood district. It is believed that he was stooping between the rails tightening a joint bolt and did not hear the approaching train.

It is estimated that the estate left by Isaac Stephenson Jr., of Menominee who died in a pullman car berth while enroute to Chicago two weeks ago, will approach a million dollars. It is known that he left real estate valued at over $500,000. He left no will.

More than 30 deer were brought to the city on Saturday by Escanaba hunters. Among the successful hunters were: Chief of Police Andrew Iverson, Walter and William Wickert, F. W. Aronson, Charles Larson, Victor Johnson, Axel Carlson, Andrew Erickson, John Peterson, Charles Nelson, Edward Reynoldson, John Harrison, John Lehr, Eric Oberg and James Booth.

LYRICS OF LIFE

OUR TIME

We live in ages, ours a time
Too close to us to seem sublime.
For only when our time is past.
The pattern made, the metal cast,
We know, whatever world it brings,
We then were doing larger things
Than we supposed, not changing these
Brief days, but moulding centuries.

Think not our time a passing phase.
That we experiment with days,
For we are building longer years
Than in the building now appears.
We speak of laws, we talk of change,
As if our time we re-arrange,
And yet our children's children's fate
Is settled as we legislate.

A world is in the making; all
We do is great, and nothing small
If good, yet hard to follow through.
If evil, harder to undo.
We talk of time, call this our own,
While casting metal, shaping stone.
And yet are making, well or how,
The world a hundred years from now.

ENDS and backs who have to go down for passes get quite a few hard knocks from opponents on pass defense who, too often, are out to get the receiver rather than the ball. Of course, illegal interference is promptly penalized when seen by the official, but a penalty will in no way salve the injuries.

Receivers, therefore, should be taught how to "take it"—how to go up after a pass, get knocked down hard, and still be able to get up.

Relax from the waist up and have the arms and the body soft and liquid. Wrists must be relaxed and the hands and arms should be set, although not tensed, to gather in the ball when it reaches the passer.

PRIVATE HUNTING GROUNDS

THE I. Stephenson company introduces a sort of an innovation in offering a 40-acre piece of cut-over land in good game country to the hunter who shoots the largest buck during the present hunting season. The winner of the prize will have an ideal site for a hunting camp.

The interest that has been aroused by the offer would seem to indicate that private hunting grounds are highly desirable. Upper peninsula lumbering companies and the conservation department report that in recent years there has been increased demand for such property.

In lower Michigan, all the choice hunting lands are posted. In some instances, farmers derive an appreciable amount of revenue from the selling of hunting privileges, while other tracts are maintained by sportsmen simply for enjoyment by themselves and their friends.

Very likely the same situation will develop in the upper peninsula. This is a large territory, but the fact must not be overlooked that more people are also taking up the pastime of hunting deer and smaller game. Sportsmen from throughout the middle west are coming north to the upper peninsula to enjoy the great outdoors. Becoming enamoured with this country, they are gradually acquiring ownership to tracts of land fronting lakes and streams for the establishment of summer homes and hunting camps.

There is no reason why encouragement should not be given to this movement. These sportsmen come up and spend money at our gas stations and stores; some pay caretakers to protect their places; and also in some instances they remove lands from the delinquent tax rolls.

C. C. C. IN WINTER

SOME doubt has been expressed that the boys of the Civilian Conservation Corps will enjoy spending the winter in upper peninsula camps. A goodly proportion of the youths come from lower Michigan, where the weather is not generally as severe as in this northern section.

Capt. Joseph W. Bollenbeck, commander of the Gwinn camp, reports his civilian foresters are becoming acclimated to this country. The captain is relying much on a continuance of the camp recreational program to keep them amused and satisfied.

With summer sports off the calendar, Capt. Bollenbeck is now making preparations for an extensive winter recreational program. The Gwinn country abounds with hills, lakes and woods. Toboggan slides, hockey and skating rinks are contemplated. With the appropriation the government allows for recreational expense, a number of skates, hockey sticks, skiis and toboggans will be secured for the C. C. C. boys.

It is highly probable that the C. C. C. program will give increased impetus to the movement to make winter sports more popular in this ideal region. The hockey game, in particular, may have a chance to grow.

MINORS ARE BARRED

No boys or girls under 18 years of age may be employed as waiters or entertainers in places where beer is sold on the premises, according to the commission's latest of a large number of rulings. Determined to be non-intoxicating by Congress, the 3.2 per cent beer is now being attached with an odium that takes it out of the soft drink class. Minors may work in confectionery and drug stores, where pop and other non-intoxicating drinks are dispensed, but not in beer establishments.

Is this an admission by the liquor control commission that beer parlors are not really nice places?

FROM POLITICS TO ECONOMICS

THERE is something deeply interesting about the reorganization of the governmental structure which Mussolini is reported to be preparing for Italy.

Instead of a Chamber of Deputies, it is said, Italy will have a sort of parliament containing delegates representing commerce, agriculture, and industry throughout the country, grouped in some 50 "guilds." Political representation practically will cease, to be replaced by economic representation.

It is worth remembering that someone ironically suggested this for the United States a generation ago, urging that we have senators representing coal, iron, corn, wheat, oil, and so on. And the idea really isn't altogether silly. It will be interesting to see what Mussolini does with it.

THWARTING JUSTICE

IF YOU would like to know about one of the dodges which enable crooks to escape punishment for their misdeeds, consider the plight of Mrs. Clara Alt of Chicago.

Mrs. Alt's home was burglarized in 1928. Twenty times since then Mrs. Alt has gone to court prepared to testify against the men who have been charged with the crime; and each time the case has been continued, so that Mrs. Alt has had the fun of going to the courthouse 20 times for nothing.

The other day a new hearing was scheduled. Mrs. Alt was on a women's committee to welcome Mrs. Roosevelt to the World's Fair, so she didn't go to court. She was sent for and fined $10 for staying away.

If you can think of any system of court procedure better calculated to help the crook defeat justice, there are plenty of slippery lawyers who would be very glad to hear from you.

HOMES WORSE THAN JAILS

ONE of the most shocking disclosures of recent weeks is the story of the women textile workers in Alabama who refused to leave the jail where they had been confined because it was more comfortable than their own homes.

These women—arrested after an outburst of violence in connection with a cotton mill strike at Mobile—were offered their freedom on bond and turned it down.

"We have running hot water in jail for baths, which beats heating water in a tin pail and washing in a laundry tub all hollow," one of them explained.

When you reflect on what a dismal place the ordinary county jail is, and then reflect further on the fact that even such accommodations seemed to these women preferable to their own homes, you get an appalling glimpse at the living conditions with which some American citizens must put up.

The Unknown Blond

(By NEA Service) BY LAURA LOU BROOKMAN

BEGIN HERE TODAY

On a stormy November evening DAVID BANNISTER meets a pretty blond girl and offers her a lift in the cab in which he is riding. Her handbag opens and he sees a revolver inside.

Next morning Bannister reads that TRACY KING, orchestra leader in a movie theater, has been found dead in his apartment. Police are searching for an 'unknown blond' who visited King the night before. Bannister, remembering the girl in the taxicab, is puzzled.

He sees her again that morning. The girl tells him her name is JULIET FRANCE and that she knows nothing of the murder. She begs Bannister to help her and he agrees.

He goes to see his old friend, JIM PAXTON, editor of the Tremont Post.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER VI

Jim Paxton's face lighted as he saw the figure in the doorway. "Hello there!" he exclaimed. "Glad you came around." Paxton put aside the cigar he had been chewing and leaned back in his chair. "Lord," he sighed. "What a morning!"

Bannister sauntered to a chair beside the editor's desk. The desk itself was piled high with a litter of newspapers, galley proofs, large manilla envelopes and a stack of letters that had not been opened.

"How much did you lose last night?" Bannister demanded.

"Oh, it isn't that. I followed your example and went home early," Paxton assured him, "but I've been down here since six o'clock. That blasted murder last night hit us in a bad way. The Times had all the best of it, of course, coming out this morning. Did a good job, too."

The Times was Tremont's only morning newspaper but the same publishers issued the evening News-Press. Against such opposition the Post had prospered but it was a continuous fight.

"It hit us in a bad way," Paxton repeated. "Kennedy, the city editor, is laid up in a hospital and his assistant is a new one. Only been on the job two months. Besides that," he frowned, raising his two hands in a gesture of defenselessness, "we're short-handed. One man off on a late vacation and another quit without notice. There are a couple of youngsters filling in but they don't know what it's all about!"

"What's new on the murder?" Bannister asked.

"Nothing—apparently. I guess they're still looking for the mysterious blond. More promises that they'll have her at headquarters 'within 24 hours.' Say, it's a whale of a story, isn't it? You don't know what a sensation that crooning orchestra leader has been in this town! Girls and women all crazy about him. Sending him letters and cakes and all sorts of presents. Asking for autographed pictures. Why, our telephone operator's eyes are red and swollen and they say one of the girls in the business office has been crying half the morning—"

"Must have been popular," Bannister agreed shortly.

"Popular's no word for it! And then there's the society angle—his engagement to Denise Lang, the richest girl in Tremont. Why, it's the sort of story that doesn't break once in five years and," bitterly, "we don't even start on it before the Times has cleaned up!"

"I wouldn't say it was cleaned up," Bannister commented. "Not until they find out who killed him."

"Oh, no, of course. I didn't mean that. But the Times had the whole story—all anyone's been able to get so far. If Kennedy were only here or I had two more reporters—!"

* * *

Bannister had been sitting with his chair tipped back. He brought the two front legs of the chair to the floor now, straightened and said quietly, "You want more reporters, do you? Well, I'll take the job."

"You'll take it!"

Bannister nodded. "I'd like to take a fling at it," he said. "Remember what we were talking about last night—about the thrills and excitement we used to have? Well, I'm bored. I've been bored for months. Haven't a thing to do with myself or my time. Here a cracking good murder breaks and I'll like to get in on it. Maybe it's because I'b back in Tremont—"

"Why, Lord love you, Dave! You don't mean you want to be a reporter on the Post again, do you?"

"Why not?" Bannister was talking eagerly now. "I'd like to find out who killed Tracy King—and why. Oh, I don't suppose I'll be much help to you! Probably I'm stale; been out of harness too long. But I can do leg work. I'd like to be on the inside of a murder story once more and see the wheels go around. I used to have a pretty good standing with McNeal and I'll bet I still know half the force—"

"Go to it!" Paxton told him curtly. "There was never a better police reporter in Tremont than you were, Dave. Maybe you'll get some ideas you can use in a novel."

"Yes, and maybe I'll get my neck broken." Suddenly Dave Banister grinned. "This is going to be fun! Going to be—" He stopped. "There's one thing," he said, "I don't want to cut in on any of your boys. I mean whoever is handling the story. Your man can write all the by-line stories. All I want to do is work with him. Whatever I get I'll turn over to him to write—"

* * *

Ten minutes later Paxton and Bannister were in the city room—the same large, square city room, scarcely changed, where Bannister had worked years before. The city desk was set at a different angle. Banister recognized none of the men gathered around it. Desks and cabinets covered most of the floor space. They had been rearranged, too, but the room had the same air of activity, of disorder and preoccupation that he remembered. From beyond came the muffled roaring and whining and grinding of machines. Oh, it was all quite familiar.

But the faces of the men and women about the room were different. Paxton strode a few steps forward, then called, "Oh—Gain-

OUR TIME

We live in ages, ours a time
Too close to us to seem sublime,
For only when our time is past,
The pattern made, the metal cast,
We know, whatever world it brings,
We then were doing larger things
Than we supposed, not changing these
Brief days, but moulding centuries.

Think not our time a passing phase,
That we experiment with days,
For we are building longer years
Than in the building now appears.
We speak of laws, we talk of change,
As if our time we re-arrange,
And yet our children's children's fate
Is settled as we legislate.

A world is in the making; all
We do is great, and nothing small.
If good, yet hard to follow through,
If evil, harder to undo.
We talk of time, call this our own,
While casting metal, shaping stone.
And yet are making, well or how,
The world a hundred years from now.

Neil Gallagher is in receipt of a message that a steamer has been found ashore on Caribou Island, in Lake Superior and there is a possibility the vessel is the Henry B. Smith, aboard which his son-in-law, John Gallagher, is engaged as assistant engineer. Until the identity of the vessel is established the fate of the Escanaba man will continue in doubt.

A daughter has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Fred Moreau.

The body of Chris Keenan of Menominee, one of the members of the crew of seven people who perished aboard the barge Plymouth, when it went down off Gull Island, in Lake Michigan, has been washed ashore at Manistee, 75 miles from the scene of the wreck.

That James McDonald, of Beechwood formerly of this city, was not shot by a hunter before he was killed by a North Western train near that place last week, is the belief of most of the residents of the Beechwood district. It is believed that he was stooping between the rails tightening a joint bolt and did not hear the approaching train.

It is estimated that the estate left by Isaac Stephenson Jr., of Menominee who died in a pullman car berth while enroute to Chicago two weeks ago, will approach a million dollars. It is known that he left real estate valued at over $500,000. He left no will.

More than 30 deer were brought to the city on Saturday by Escanaba hunters. Among the successful hunters were: Chief of Police Andrew Iverson, Walter and William Wickert, F. W. Aronson, Charles Larson, Victor Johnson, Axel Carlson, Andrew Erickson, John Peterson, Charles Nelson, Edward Reynoldson, John Harrison, John Lehr, Eric Oberg and James Booth.

CLEAN FOOTBALL — JOCK SUTHERLAND

FAMOUS PITT COACH

ENDS and backs who have to go down for passes get quite a few hard knocks from opponents on pass defense who, too often, are out to get the receiver rather than the ball. Of course, illegal interference is promptly penalized when seen by the official, but a penalty will in no way salve the injuries.

Receivers, therefore, should be taught how to "take it"—how to go up after a pass, get knocked down hard, and still be able to get up.

Relax from the waist up and have the arms and the body soft and liquid. Wrists must be relaxed and the hands and arms should be set, although not tensed, to gather in the ball when it reaches the passer.

Sketch shows the way to catch a pass. 15

WARREN CHARTS MONEY VENTURE

Practical Man Who Proves His Theories Is This Professor

This is the second of three articles on "Up With Prices," in which Willis Thornton, NEA Service Staff Correspondent, explains for Daily Press readers the theories and the steps taken by the administration to raise commodity prices and bring back good times as they prevailed in 1926, theoretical "model year."

* * *

BY WILLIS THORNTON
NEA Service Staff Correspondent

Some of the farm buildings seemed to need paint pretty badly. It didn't look like a model farm—this 125-acre place outside Forest Home, N. Y., near Ithaca.

A reporter was puzzled. He asked George Warren about it. And he got a good idea of the very practical mind that is helping to shape the government's new money policy, the chief aim of which is to raise prices.

Professor Warren explained his unpainted farm buildings like this: "You never saw a building fall down for want of paint. You paint a barn roof to preserve the barn. You paint a house to sell it. But you paint the sides of a barn to look at- if you can afford it!"

It was last July, three months ago, that Cornell's Professor Warren, and Professor James Harvey Rogers of Yale became members of the brain trust. It was announced that they were to make a study of federal finances, and some guessed that they were to figure out just how Uncle Sam was to take care of his mounting 23 billions of debts.

Rank High in Brain Trust

They rose in standing in the brain trust, and now it is believed that these two, especially Professor Warren, had a very large part in our new money policy.

President Roosevelt has some reason to feel trust in Professor Warren. They have been associated for many years. Warren was adviser to the New York Agricultural Commission. His proposals on gold control came to the Roosevelt ear when he was governor.

Associates of Professor Warren at Cornell will tell you that the professor is a ferret for facts. "Get the facts" is his lifelong motto, and the creed that he has taught thousands of students at Cornell, where he heads the Agricultural Economics Department. A very practical man, no theorist, is Professor Warren.

Buys Farm, Tests Ideas

Proof of this is found in his success as a farmer. Shortly after he came to Cornell in 1906, he became interested in a survey of fruit farms, to learn why farmers weren't making any money.

He figured that the best way to find out was to do it himself, so he bought a 40-acre farm. He became convinced there was no money in the small farm, so he added to his holdings until he had 500 acres. He raised cash crops, had a large herd of Holsteins, and made money—plenty of it.

A few years ago, as he became busier, Professor Warren had to sell off all but about 125 acres of his farms, but he still has a poultry plant of 3000 chickens, and one of the best orchards and vegetable gardens in his part of the state.

But practical facts, statistics and what they mean, dominate his active life.

Leans Toward G. O. P.

Nearly 60 years ago he was born in Nebraska, son of pioneer parents, and he even can remember the last Indian raid in his neighborhood when he was a little fellow.

He was educated as a civil engineer at the University of Nebraska. He's 59, a fast walker, energetic, a natural crusader, and, insofar as he has any politics, he's a Republican.

Warren explained recently how 1926 prices came to be chosen as the goal in the race for a new managed currency and stable price level. First place, they figured out at what price level most of the present burden of debt was contracted.

It worked out that most of the money was borrowed when prices were just about at the same level they were in 1926. Then they studied insurance statistics, and found that insurance policies, which represent savings, also were created largely at price levels of 1926, which happens to be a 15-year average for the years 1918-1932.

Clarifies Gold Theory

Professor Warren's theory, complicated in detail, is simple enough in principle. He believes that the return of a debt-burdened world to the gold standard after the war created such a rush for gold that its value was pushed up out of all proper relationship to prices of other things.

Therefore, since the value of gold in dollars is fixed by law, the thing to do is to make what gold you have serve as a base for more dollars, devaluate the dollar by decreeing that each dollar stands for less gold than before.

Naturally, then, it takes more dollars to buy anything, and the price of everything rises.

Rather than change this gold-and-dollar relationship by law on a permanent basis, it was decided to experiment. That is, by offering more dollars for new gold in this country and for gold in foreign countries, it was figured the same effect could be had, yet the prices could be changed from day to day as results were noted.

Economists Voice Doubt

Governor George L. Harrison of the New York Federal Reserve bank was given power to conduct these dealings at whatever prices and in whatever volume he wishes.

He can keep buying gold at higher prices than exist today as long as it is desired to keep prices moving up.

There is, of course, considerable question as to whether it really is as simple as that. Many economists believe that a rise in prices does not necessarily follow cheapened dollars at all. We shall see.

Professor Warren, however, believes strongly that this is the one big step necessary. He wrote in August, "It would be a great calamity to be deluded into thinking that the rise in prices which has come from a decline in the gold value of the dollar is due to currency, credit or government control of agriculture and industry, all of which came later.

"None of these can succeed except as the gold content of the dollar is reduced, and if the gold content of the dollar is reduced by the right amount, none of these is necessary."

How His Plan Works

Professor Warren's "compensated dollar" is simple in principle. He wants to keep the principle that a paper dollar should be redeemable in gold. But he argues that it is silly to allow the price of important things like bread and shoes to be influenced by the price of a useless metal like gold, which itself fluctuates according to its own supply and demand.

He would, therefore, take an average of the prices of the things by which men live. When that average rises, say 10 per cent, then he would make the dollar redeemable for 10 per cent more gold than before. If prices fell 10 per cent, then he would take 10 per cent of the gold out of the dollar. Thus the dollar always would have a sympathetic relationship to the prices of other things.

Perhaps, though no one can be sure, this is what President Roosevelt meant when he said "thus we continue to move toward a managed currency."

Successful in Sweden

Such management of currency is not as new as many people assume. England, off gold, had such a currency from 1914 to 1925, and again since September, 1931. Yet she has contrived to keep her home prices far steadier than we have here.

Sweden, forced off gold with Britain, is the most conspicuous example of successful currency and price management.

The Swedish system is no patented process -it simply consists of the wise use of powers such as our own Federal Reserve system might have if it were extended to practically all banks, and were used to control credit and banking functions with the definite object of keeping the price level steady.

For instance, no one knows how much grief we might have been saved if our Federal Reserve system had been able in 1929 to cut off the flow of speculative funds which blew up the stock market bubble until it burst.

Principle Gets Trial

True, it didn't work then. But the point is, the principle was established even here 20 years ago. Establishment of the Federal Reserve system was simply to give control over bank credit money (the most-used kind) through setting rediscount rates and open market buying and selling of government securities.

That this has amounted to an influence rather than complete control doesn't matter. The point is that 20 years ago we agreed to the principle. Now we are about to carry it to the end.

NEXT: Eyes focus today on the new gold policy. But that is only one of the levers the president can pull in his determination to raise prices "in one way or another." How some of these other levers work.

Bugle Corps Takes Annual Vacationing

Weekly rehearsals of the Escanaba American Legion drum and bugle corps were suspended temporarily following the regular meeting Tuesday night at the city hall, and no practices will be held until after the holidays, when notice will be given to members regarding the resumption of the regular 1934 practice schedule. This practice is one adopted in previous years releasing members during the deer hunting season and the holiday activities.

In keeping with a vote of the members taken at a meeting Nov. 7, the quartermaster, E. W. Andrews, has called in all uniforms, equipment and instruments for the annual check-up. These must be turned over to the quartermaster this week, and will be re-issued later on application of the members.

The corps made its last outdoor appearance of 1933 on Armistice Day.

BROWN VISITS IN ESCANABA

Congressman Tells of Efforts to Get Federal Projects

Progress that has been made in securing federal projects so as to relieve unemployment in Delta county was reviewed by Congressman Prentiss M. Brown, St. Ignace, in addressing a group of Democratic party leaders at a luncheon at the Sherman hotel yesterday noon. After the meeting, Congressman Brown went to Munising to address a public gathering there last evening.

Mr. Brown reported that the postal department's proposal to construct a new $53,500 postoffice at Gladstone had received the approval of the treasury department, and had been forwarded to the public works administration. Work on the building is expected to start early next year.

The federal government will construct a lighthouse at Eleven Foot Shoal, now being served by a lightship, Mr. Brown stated. The congressman also said that he had not given up hope of securing an appropriation for the construction of a new lighthouse and government supply dock at Sand Point, and that he would press the matter further upon his return to Washington Jan. 4.

He called attention to the new opportunity that has been afforded by the federal emergency relief administration for obtaining funds for public works construction by counties and municipalities. The sum of $400,000,000 has been allocated for such projects, to be expended under the plan whereby expenditures by local communities would be matched dollar per dollar by the federal and state governments.

James E. Mogan, managing director of the state board of tax administration, gave a brief talk, in which he denied rumors that Governor Comstock is "building a $75,000 mansion and has a million dollars in the bank." He referred also to the gossip that has been circulated concerning the governor's friendship for Isaiah Leebove, and asserted that there has been no proof presented that the New York lawyer and oil operator had any dishonest connections with the administration.

Gets 13,000 Volts

Iron Mountain—Valentine Moroni, 101 West Flesheim street, narrowly escaped death by electrocution at 8:30 o'clock this morning when he came in contact with a 13,000-volt power line in the Chapin mine substation near the Hamilton shaft.

Moroni, who was removed to General hospital, was resting comfortably at noon and with the exception of serious burns on both hands and his left arm was little the worse for his experience. According to his physician, Dr. A. H. Smith, he will be released from the hospital within a few days.

PUBLIC URGED TO CONTRIBUTE

Red Cross Memberships Can Be Obtained at Any Bank

"The American Red Cross, local and national, operates entirely on income derived from memberships of the people of the United States." This statement was made today by Carl J. Sawyer, chairman of the Roll Call campaign of the Delta county chapter.

The general public is urged to contribute to the support of the Red Cross. Persons, who have not been solicited, may secure their memberships at the Escanaba Chamber of Commerce office or at any of the banks.

Activities Reviewed

"Individual membership provides the motive power behind all the programs of the organization," the roll call chairman continued. "The generous response of the American people in past years made it possible for Red Cross to conduct the immense distribution of farm board wheat and cotton. This single operation was carried on at a cost of $685,000 to the organization. Acts of congress making these farm board commodities available for distribution did not provide funds or means of paying for overhead costs. Congress made the wheat and cotton available for distribution, leaving the processing and distribution problems to the Red Cross, thereby requiring the agency to pay all administrative costs from its own funds. The problem was met and handled. Red Cross taking eighty-five million bushels of wheat and eight hundred thousand bales of cotton in storage at hundreds of points in the United States, converting them into flour, cloth and clothing and distributing them to the needy and distressed in practically every community in the country. Only seventeen counties of the three thousand and seventy-five did not ask for and receive flour.

"In its far-reaching disaster relief work, the Red Cross is enabled to give necessary help only because it has the confidence of the American people and because millions enroll each year as members. In the case of the southern California earthquake last March, Red Cross supplied dozens of workers and one hundred thousand dollars toward the fund needed to care for the injured and their families, including many orphans of the disaster, and the other necessary assistance to the victims. Without the support of the public through memberships enrolled each year, the work would have been necessarily limited to what it was possible to do with funds voluntarily contributed for the disaster.

Types Of Memberships

"There are several types of memberships to be had," the chapter head explained. "The annual membership is $1, but any individual may take larger memberships with full confidence that the added support given the chapter is needed and most welcome. Only fifty cents of the membership fee goes to the national organization. In the case of a five- or ten, or twenty-five dollar membership, the money all stays here to be used locally, except the fifty cents which goes to the National Red Cross."

Army Of Hunters Larger This Year

Observations in Delta county indicate that this year's army of deer hunters will be larger than last season.

In Escanaba, license agencies report a brisk sale, and parties of hunters enroute to camps are in evidence daily. A number of non-resident hunters have been reported.

The first successful hunter was not in evidence, at least no one had heard of him on the opening day of the season. Near-zero weather and biting breezes greeted those who tried their luck Wednesday.

A CLEAR COMPLEXION

Ruddy cheeks—sparkling eyes—most women can have. Dr. F. M. Edwards for 20 years treated scores of women for liver and bowel ailments. During these years he gave his patients a substitute for calomel made of a few well-known vegetable ingredients, naming them Dr. Edwards Olive Tablets. Know them by their olive color.

These tablets are wonder-workers on the liver and bowels, causing a normal action, carrying off the waste and poisonous matter in one's system.

If you have a pale face, sallow look, dull eyes, pimples, coated tongue, headaches, a listless, no-good feeling, all out of sorts, inactive bowels, take one of Dr. Edwards Olive Tablets nightly for a time and note the pleasing results.

Thousands of women and men take Dr. Edwards Olive Tablets—now and then to keep fit. 15c. 30c and 60c.

WARREN CHARTS MONEY VENTURE

Practical Man Who Proves His Theories Is This Professor

This is the second of three articles on "Up With Prices," in which Willis Thornton, NEA Service Staff Correspondent, explains for Daily Press readers the theories and the steps taken by the administration to raise commodity prices and bring back good times as they prevailed in 1926, theoretical "model year."

* * *

BY WILLIS THORNTON
NEA Service Staff Correspondent

Some of the farm buildings seemed to need paint pretty badly. It didn't look like a model farm—this 125-acre place outside Forest Home, N. Y., near Ithaca.

A reporter was puzzled. He asked George Warren about it. And he got a good idea of the very practical mind that is helping to shape the government's new money policy, the chief aim of which is to raise prices.

Professor Warren explained his unpainted farm buildings like this: "You never saw a building fall down for want of paint. You paint a barn roof to preserve the barn. You paint a house to sell it. But you paint the sides of a barn to look at—if you can afford it!"

It was last July, three months ago, that Cornell's Professor Warren, and Professor James Harvey Rogers of Yale became members of the brain trust. It was announced that they were to make a study of federal finances, and some guessed that they were to figure out just how Uncle Sam was to take care of his mounting 23 billions of debts.

Rank High in Brain Trust

They rose in standing in the brain trust, and now it is believed that these two, especially Professor Warren, had a very large part in our new money policy.

President Roosevelt has some reason to feel trust in Professor Warren. They have been associated for many years. Warren was adviser to the New York Agricultural Commission. His proposals on gold control came to the Roosevelt ear when he was governor.

Associates of Professor Warren at Cornell will tell you that the professor is a ferret for facts. "Get the facts" is his lifelong motto, and the creed that he has taught thousands of students at Cornell, where he heads the Agricultural Economics Department. A very practical man, no theorist, is Professor Warren.

Buys Farm, Tests Ideas

Proof of this is found in his success as a farmer. Shortly after he came to Cornell in 1906, he became interested in a survey of fruit farms, to learn why farmers weren't making any money.

He figured that the best way to find out was to do it himself, so he bought a 40-acre farm. He became convinced there was no money in the small farm, so he added to his holdings until he had 500 acres. He raised cash crops, had a large herd of Holsteins, and made money—plenty of it.

A few years ago, as he became busier, Professor Warren had to sell off all but about 125 acres of his farms, but he still has a poultry plant of 3000 chickens, and one of the best orchards and vegetable gardens in his part of the state.

But practical facts, statistics and what they mean, dominate his active life.

Leans Toward G. O. P.

Nearly 60 years ago he was born in Nebraska, son of pioneer parents, and he even can remember the last Indian raid in his neighborhood when he was a little fellow.

He was educated as a civil engineer at the University of Nebraska. He's 59, a fast walker, energetic, a natural crusader, and, insofar as he has any politics, he's a Republican.

Warren explained recently how 1926 prices came to be chosen as the goal in the race for a new managed currency and stable price level. First place, they figured out at what price level most of the present burden of debt was contracted.

It worked out that most of the money was borrowed when prices were just about at the same level they were in 1926. Then they studied insurance statistics, and found that insurance policies, which represent savings, also were created largely at price levels of 1926, which happens to be a 15-year average for the years 1918-1932.

Clarifies Gold Theory

Professor Warren's theory, complicated in detail, is simple enough in principle. He believes that the return of a debt-burdened world to the gold standard after the war created such a rush for gold that its value was pushed up out of all proper relationship to prices of other things.

Therefore, since the value of gold in dollars is fixed by law, the thing to do is to make what gold you have serve as a base for more dollars, devaluate the dollar by decreeing that each dollar stands for less gold than before.

Naturally, then, it takes more dollars to buy anything, and the price of everything rises.

Rather than change this gold-and-dollar relationship by law on a permanent basis, it was decided to experiment. That is, by offering more dollars for new gold in this country and for gold in foreign countries, it was figured the same effect could be had, yet the prices could be changed from day to day as results were noted.

Economists Voice Doubt

Governor George L. Harrison of the New York Federal Reserve bank was given power to conduct these dealings at whatever prices and in whatever volume he wishes.

He can keep buying gold at higher prices than exist today as long as it is desired to keep prices moving up.

There is, of course, considerable question as to whether it really is as simple as that. Many economists believe that a rise in prices does not necessarily follow cheapened dollars at all. We shall see.

Professor Warren, however, believes strongly that this is the one big step necessary. He wrote in August, "It would be a great calamity to be deluded into thinking that the rise in prices which has come from a decline in the gold value of the dollar is due to currency, credit or government control of agriculture and industry, all of which came later.

"None of these can succeed except as the gold content of the dollar is reduced, and if the gold content of the dollar is reduced by the right amount, none of these is necessary."

How His Plan Works

Professor Warren's "compensated dollar" is simple in principle. He wants to keep the principle that a paper dollar should be redeemable in gold. But he argues that it is silly to allow the price of important things like bread and shoes to be influenced by the price of a useless metal like gold, which itself fluctuates according to its own supply and demand.

He would, therefore, take an average of the prices of the things by which men live. When that average rises, say 10 per cent, then he would make the dollar redeemable for 10 per cent more gold than before. If prices fell 10 per cent, then he would take 10 per cent of the gold out of the dollar. Thus the dollar always would have a sympathetic relationship to the prices of other things.

Perhaps, though no one can be sure, this is what President Roosevelt meant when he said "thus we continue to move toward a managed currency."

Successful in Sweden

Such management of currency is not as new as many people assume. England, off gold, had such a currency from 1914 to 1925, and again since September, 1931. Yet she has contrived to keep her home prices far steadier than we have here.

Sweden, forced off gold with Britain, is the most conspicuous example of successful currency and price management.

The Swedish system is no patented process—it simply consists of the wise use of powers such as our own Federal Reserve system might have if it were extended to practically all banks, and were used to control credit and banking functions with the definite object of keeping the price level steady.

For instance, no one knows how much grief we might have been saved if our Federal Reserve system had been able in 1929 to cut off the flow of speculative funds which blew up the stock market bubble until it burst.

Principle Gets Trial

True, it didn't work then. But the point is, the principle was established even here 20 years ago. Establishment of the Federal Reserve system was simply to give control over bank credit money (the most-used kind) through setting rediscount rates and open market buying and selling of government securities.

That this has amounted to an influence rather than complete control doesn't matter. The point is that 20 years ago we agreed to the principle. Now we are about to carry it to the end.

NEXT: Eyes focus today on the new gold policy. But that is only one of the levers the president can pull in his determination to raise prices "in one way or another." How some of these other levers work.

Bugle Corps Takes Annual Vacationing

Weekly rehearsals of the Escanaba American Legion drum and bugle corps were suspended temporarily following the regular meeting Tuesday night at the city hall, and no practices will be held until after the holidays, when notice will be given to members regarding the resumption of the regular 1934 practice schedule. This practice is one adopted in previous years releasing members during the deer hunting season and the holiday activities.

In keeping with a vote of the members taken at a meeting Nov. 7, the quartermaster, E. W. Andrews, has called in all uniforms, equipment and instruments for the annual check-up. These must be turned over to the quartermaster this week, and will be re-issued later on application of the members.

The corps made its last outdoor appearance of 1933 on Armistice Day.

Progress that has been made in securing federal projects so as to relieve unemployment in Delta county was reviewed by Congressman Prentiss M. Brown, St. Ignace, in addressing a group of Democratic party leaders at a luncheon at the Sherman hotel yesterday noon. After the meeting, Congressman Brown went to Munising to address a public gathering there last evening.

Mr. Brown reported that the postal department's proposal to construct a new $53,500 postoffice at Gladstone had received the approval of the treasury department, and had been forwarded to the public works administration. Work on the building is expected to start early next year.

The federal government will construct a lighthouse at Eleven Foot Shoal, now being served by a lightship, Mr. Brown stated. The congressman also said that he had not given up hope of securing an appropriation for the construction of a new lighthouse and government supply dock at Sand Point, and that he would press the matter further upon his return to Washington Jan. 4.

He called attention to the new opportunity that has been afforded by the federal emergency relief administration for obtaining funds for public works construction by counties and municipalities. The sum of $400,000,000 has been allocated for such projects, to be expended under the plan whereby expenditures by local communities would be matched dollar per dollar by the federal and state governments.

James E. Mogan, managing director of the state board of tax administration, gave a brief talk, in which he denied rumors that Governor Comstock is "building a $75,000 mansion and has a million dollars in the bank." He referred also to the gossip that has been circulated concerning the governor's friendship for Isaiah Leebove, and asserted that there has been no proof presented that the New York lawyer and oil operator had any dishonest connections with the administration.

Iron Mountain—Valentine Moroni, 101 West Fleshiem street, narrowly escaped death by electrocution at 8:30 o'clock this morning when he came in contact with a 13,000-volt power line in the Chapin mine substation near the Hamilton shaft.

Moroni, who was removed to General hospital, was resting comfortably at noon and with the exception of serious burns on both hands and his left arm was little the worse for his experience. According to his physician, Dr. A. R. Smith, he will be released from the hospital within a few days.

Problems of a Business Career

Recently an employment agency head told me she thought the telephone desk an excellent place for budding secretaries to train. She went even further and predicted a combination job of the future—that of a "secretary-telephonist." Her reason was that a girl who has the tact to handle things and persons properly over the telephone has the chief qualifications for success in business.

If this is true, instead of turning up their pert little noses at switchboard relief or service, beginners with ambition should be fighting for a chance to "plug 'em in."

For without doubt the private secretary gets the meanest part of the telephone detail. As shock absorber for her boss she has to answer his phone, find out who is calling and what is wanted, and then either put her chief on the line, arrange a later appointment, or tactfully get rid of the unwanted person.

Weeding the Callers

There's no use in trying to get past the pleasant young sentry at the vocal gate, either. In fact, a good many inquiring persons are learning, instead of asking for Mr. Blank himself, to ask for "Mr. Blank's secretary, please," thereby winning her good will at the start. They find they get further by frankly stating their business to her than by trying to ignore her and insisting on speaking to Mr. Blank direct.

Many girls who have this thankless job of separating the sheep from the goats without even seeing the color of their eyes, have asked me how to get rid of the occasional individual who gives an unknown name, says his business is "personal," demands an interview and becomes very angry when it is refused.

Those whose reasons for telephoning are legitimate, and whose business is apt to be of mutual benefit, have no reason for being secretive and usually state their purpose clearly at once. Nine times out of ten the individual who resents being questioned is a salesman who knows if he divulges his business he will be turned down, so he tries to bluff his way in. After a girl has asked politely, but in vain, for the needed information, she is quite justified in saying pleasantly but firmly, "I am very sorry, but I can't arrange an appointment with Mr. Blank unless I know what you wish to see him about. Goodbye."

There's a fine point in telephone etiquette on which many executives, even, are not clear. When Mr. Smith says, "Get Mr. Brown, of the Such and Such Company, for me," what happens?

Saving Officials Time

The girl rings Mr. Brown's office, gets his secretary and says, "Mr. Brown, please. Mr. Smith of the Thus and So Company calling." Since this is evidently business, Mr. Brown is put on the phone at once. But instead of being greeted by Mr. Smith, a feminine voice says, "Just a minute, please." And Brown, who has dropped important matters to answer the phone, is forced to hang on to the receiver while Smith is being located. Often after waiting some time, he is told, "Mr. Smith must have stepped out. He was here just a minute ago. He'll call you later."

When this happens five or six times a day it becomes a serious waste of executive time and temper, and there is some justification in Mr. Brown's raging to himself, "Who the heck does this fellow think he is, anyway? Isn't my time as valuable as his?"

Here's the rule: When the man being called is of equal or lower position than the one calling, the secretary should get him on the line before she calls her employer. But if she is calling someone whose position in the business world is above that of the man she works for, she must be careful to have her employer on the line when the Upper Dog barks his "Hello."

Lodge Bridge Tournament Is Of Wide Interest

Considerable interest is being shown in the Elks national bridge tournament in which the local lodge is entered, and which will be held in all Elks clubs of the country, on Friday, November 24.

The play is open to all Elks and their friends and will be by pairs. Sixteen pre-arranged hands provided by sixteen of the leading bridge authorities will be used. These experts have also furnished an analysis of the bidding and play of each hands which will establish the score of the hands.

Four trophies will be awarded the national championship, two of them in the contract bridge division and two in the auction bridge class. Eight replica models of these will be awarded the national champions for permanent possession. In addition four top score emblems will be provided for the champions of each lodge.

Harold P. Lindsay is chairman of the tournament and entries may be made with him.

In New York Stage News

DENNIE MOORE . . . joins in "The Pursuit of Happiness" via the kitchen.

New York—With a hey-nonny-nonny and a rowdy-dow, the legitimate stage seems to have laid aside most of its repressions to go on a spree. Along with musical comedy and burlesque, it has turned its attention to rich and racy variations on an ancient theme, and if the Old Lady From Dubuque really doesn't like these carryingson, she can file her protestations at the box office.

Not by sly and often smutty innuendos, such as have been creeping into the movies of late, does the theater express its rollicking opinions of life and love. It hews to the voluptuous line, and lets the quips fall where they may get either a blush or a belly-laugh.

And so, under a string of lights that spell, "Sailor, Beware!" there is to be found a cheerful little company of dance-hall gals, and gobs on predatory shore leave, playing to a packed house and a goodly number of standees.

On the U. S. S. Dakota, stationed in the Canal Zone, is a sea-going Casanova named "Dynamite" Jones. Famed throughout the fleet is Dynamite as a collector of hearts and trophies of the chase. He gets more mail than the admiral, and is quite as self-assured regarding his particular talents.

Working as a taxi-dancer in the Idle Hour Cafe in Panama City is a virtuous, and virtually Victorian, young woman named Billie Jackson. Having successfully repulsed the advances of the United States fleet, it was inevitable that she should be nicknamed "Stonewall."

Well, some sailors and marines get to arguing about whether "Dynamite" could win "Stonewall's" favor, and first thing you know the accepted challenge has assumed the proportions of a navy sweepstakes, with pay for months in advance being wagered on the outcome. The girls in the Idle Hour make bets too, for they have as much confidence in "Stonewall's" honor as the navy has in "Dynamite's" charm.

Succeeding scenes reveal the varying progress of the sailor's campaign, and in a picturesque and hilarious fashion that has nice old dowagers snorting into their 'kerchiefs. As you doubtless have guessed, "Dynamite" makes the mistake of really putting his heart into his work, and falls in love. Since Miss Jackson reciprocates, becoming his fiancee, all bets are off. And thus the piece redeems its naughtiness and salty situations.

Less bawdy, but not a whit less funny, is "The Pursuit of Happiness," a warm little play about cold nights in Connecticut in the year 1777. It is essentially a study of the curiously incongruous custom of "bundling," but it also delivers itself of some effective opinions about the reformers of any age.

Bundling, as you may have read somewhere, was as much an expedient as a privilege in colonial New England. Few parents could afford to keep the fires burning high when their daughters received admirers in the evenings. So it was a widely accepted practice for young couples to hop into bed, with their clothes on, and thus keep warm while they talked of this and that and perhaps whispered, over the center-board, of love.

Thus did Puritanism make a concession to frugality. But when Prudence Kirkland bundled innocently with her sweetheart, a snooping old autocrat of the village altar stirred up all sorts of trouble. Prudence's own respected parents had bundled in their day, but by this time the quaint practice was assuming lesser repute.

The sweetheart in this case is a young Hessian who, under honorable circumstances, has deserted the enemy mercenaries to take up the life, liberty and pursuit of happiness affirmed by the new republic. While awaiting an appointment as interpreter with the American forces, he is technically a prisoner but actually a guest in the home of Prudence's father, Captain Kirkland. In his young eagerness to conform to what he supposes are liberal American ideas he incurs the wrath of the parson and the jealous sheriff, and almost gets himself shot at sunrise before his commission arrives.

The raciest lines are contributed by a wanton little kitchen girl (Miss Dennie Moore), a lass who patriotically restricts her favors to the Colonial army. Peggy Conklin, as Prudence, displays all that can be asked in impish innocence. But the most noteworthy item in the list of players is the name of Tonio Selwart, himself a Bavarian, who here makes his debut as the young Hessian soldier. He already is being compared, and favorably, to Francis Lederer, and seems likely to become the matinee It-Man of the season.

People who attend "Her Man of Wax," a weird farce which toys with the idea of Napoleon returning to this earth, see Lenore Ulric and not much else.

The idea was adapted from a satirical German play which speculated on the political impotence of a Little Corporal seeking to solve the world's present problems, and finally giving up in despair. But somewhere in the rewriting, "Her Man of Wax" was transformed into a bedroom farce, with Miss Ulric as the modern Josephine and Lloyd Corrigan, a motion picture director, struggling with the unconvincing lines of a 1933 Napoleon.

Warm Yourself

Charlotte, N. C., (AP)—Old fashioned lanterns supplied by the street maintenance department were used to furnish warmth to stenographers and clerks in the city hall here recently. It was a bit chilly, and the furnace had not yet been fired up for the season.

Problems of a Business Career

Recently an employment agency head told me she thought the telephone desk an excellent place for budding secretaries to train. She went even further and predicted a combination job of the future—that of a "secretary-telephonist." Her reason was that a girl who has the tact to handle things and persons properly over the telephone has the chief qualifications for success in business.

If this is true, instead of turning up their pert little noses at switchboard relief or service, beginners with ambition should be fighting for a chance to "plug 'em in."

For without doubt the private secretary gets the meanest part of the telephone detail. As shock absorber for her boss she has to answer his phone, find out who is calling and what is wanted, and then either put her chief on the line, arrange a later appointment, or tactfully get rid of the unwanted person.

Weeding the Callers

There's no use in trying to get past the pleasant young sentry at the vocal gate, either. In fact, a good many inquiring persons are learning, instead of asking for Mr. Blank himself, to ask for "Mr. Blank's secretary, please," thereby winning her good will at the start. They find they get further by frankly stating their business to her than by trying to ignore her and insisting on speaking to Mr. Blank direct.

Many girls who have this thankless job of separating the sheep from the goats without even seeing the color of their eyes, have asked me how to get rid of the occasional individual who gives an unknown name, says his business is "personal," demands an interview and becomes very angry when it is refused.

Those whose reasons for telephoning are legitimate, and whose business is apt to be of mutual benefit, have no reason for being secretive and usually state their purpose clearly at once. Nine times out of ten the individual who resents being questioned is a salesman who knows if he divulges his business he will be turned down, so he tries to bluff his way in. After a girl has asked politely, but in vain, for the needed information, she is quite justified in saying pleasantly—but firmly, "I am very sorry, but I can't arrange an appointment with Mr. Blank unless I know what you wish to see him about. Goodbye."

There's a fine point in telephone etiquette on which many executives, even, are not clear. When Mr. Smith says, "Get Mr. Brown, of the Such and Such Company, for me," what happens?

Saving Officials Time

The girl rings Mr. Brown's office, gets his secretary and says, "Mr. Brown, please. Mr. Smith of the Thus and So Company calling." Since this is evidently business, Mr. Brown is put on the phone at once. But instead of being greeted by Mr. Smith, a feminine voice says, "Just a minute, please." And Brown, who has dropped important matters to answer the phone, is forced to hang on to the receiver while Smith is being located. Often after waiting some time, he is told, "Mr. Smith must have stepped out. He was here just a minute ago. He'll call you later."

When this happens five or six times a day it becomes a serious waste of executive time and temper, and there is some justification in Mr. Brown's raging to himself, "Who the heck does this fellow think he is, anyway? Isn't my time as valuable as his?"

Here's the rule. When the man being called is of equal or lower position than the one calling, the secretary should get him on the line before she calls her employer. But if she is calling someone whose position in the business world is above that of the man she works for, she must be careful to have her employer on the line when the Upper Dog barks his "Hello."

Lodge Bridge Tournament Is Of Wide Interest

Considerable interest is being shown in the Elks national bridge tournament in which the local lodge is entered, and which will be held in all Elks clubs of the country, on Friday, November 24.

The play is open to all Elks and their friends and will be by pairs. Sixteen pre-arranged hands provided by sixteen of the leading bridge authorities will be used. These experts have also furnished an analysis of the bidding and play of each hands which will establish the score of the hands.

Four trophies will be awarded the national championship, two of them in the contract bridge division and two in the auction bridge class. Eight replica models of these will be awarded the national champions for permanent possession. In addition four top score emblems will be provided for the champions of each lodge.

Harold P. Lindsay is chairman of the tournament and entries may be made with him.

In New York Stage News

DENNIE MOORE . . . joins in "The Pursuit of Happiness" via the kitchen.

New York—With a hey-nonny-nonny and a rowdy-dow, the legitimate stage seems to have laid aside most of its repressions to go on a spree. Along with musical comedy and burlesque, it has turned its attention to rich and racy variations on an ancient theme, and if the Old Lady From Dubuque really doesn't like these carryingson, she can file her protestations at the box office.

Not by sly and often smutty innuendos, such as have been creeping into the movies of late, does the theater express its rollicking opinions of life and love. It hews to the voluptuous line, and lets the quips fall where they may get either a blush or a belly-laugh.

And so, under a string of lights that spell, "Sailor, Beware!" there is to be found a cheerful little company of dance-hall gals, and gobs on predatory shore-leave, playing to a packed house and a goodly number of standees.

On the U. S. S. Dakota, stationed in the Canal Zone, is a sea-going Casanova named "Dynamite" Jones. Famed throughout the fleet is Dynamite as a collector of hearts and trophies of the chase. He gets more mail than the admiral, and is quite as self-assured regarding his particular talents.

Working as a taxi-dancer in the Idle Hour Cafe in Panama City is a virtuous, and virtually Victorian, young woman named Billie Jackson. Having successfully repulsed the advances of the United States fleet, it was inevitable that she should be nicknamed "Stonewall."

Well, some sailors and marines get to arguing about whether "Dynamite" could win "Stonewall's" favor, and first thing you know the accepted challenge has assumed the proportions of a navy sweepstakes, with pay for months in advance being wagered on the outcome. The girls in the Idle Hour make bets too, for they have as much confidence in "Stonewall's" honor as the navy has in "Dynamite's" charm.

Succeeding scenes reveal the varying progress of the sailor's campaign, and in a picturesque and hilarious fashion that has nice old dowagers snorting into their 'kerchiefs. As you doubtless have guessed, "Dynamite" makes the mistake of really putting his heart into his work, and falls in love. Since Miss Jackson reciprocates, becoming his fiancee, all bets are off. And thus the piece redeems its naughtiness and salty situations.

Less bawdy, but not a whit less funny, is "The Pursuit of Happiness," a warm little play about cold nights in Connecticut in the year 1777. It is essentially a study of the curiously incongruous custom of "bundling," but it also delivers itself of some effective opinions about the reformers of any age.

Bundling, as you may have read somewhere, was as much an expedient as a privilege in colonial New England. Few parents could afford to keep the fires burning high when their daughters received admirers in the evenings. So it was a widely accepted practice for young couples to hop into bed, with their clothes on, and thus keep warm while they talked of this and that and perhaps whispered, over the center-board, of love.

Thus did Puritanism make a concession to frugality. But when Prudence Kirkland bundled innocently with her sweetheart, a snooping old autocrat of the village altar stirred up all sorts of trouble. Prudence's own respected parents had bundled in their day, but by this time the quaint practice was assuming lesser repute.

The sweetheart in this case is a young Hessian who, under honorable circumstances, has deserted the enemy mercenaries to take up the life, liberty and pursuit of happiness affirmed by the new republic. While awaiting an appointment as interpreter with the American forces, he is technically a prisoner but actually a guest in the home of Prudence's father, Captain Kirkland. In his young eagerness to conform to what he supposes are liberal American ideas he incurs the wrath of the parson and the jealous sheriff, and almost gets himself shot at sunrise before his commission arrives.

The raciest lines are contributed by a wanton little kitchen girl (Miss Dennie Moore), a lass who patriotically restricts her favors to the Colonial army. Peggy Conklin, as Prudence, displays all that can be asked in impish innocence. But the most noteworthy item in the list of players is the name of Tonio Selwart, himself a Bavarian, who here makes his debut as the young Hessian soldier. He already is being compared, and favorably, to Francis Lederer, and seems likely to become the matinee It-Man of the season.

People who attend "Her Man of Wax," a weird farce which toys with the idea of Napoleon returning to this earth, see Lenore Ulric and not much else.

The idea was adapted from a satirical German play which speculated on the political impotence of a Little Corporal seeking to solve the world's present problems, and finally giving up in despair. But somewhere in the rewriting, "Her Man of Wax" was transformed into a bedroom farce, with Miss Ulric as the modern Josephine and Lloyd Corrigan, a motion picture director, struggling with the unconvincing lines of a 1933 Napoleon.

EARLY START ON POSTOFFICE

Work on Federal Building Will Begin in Spring—Brown

Predictions that work on the federal post office building which has been alloted to Gladstone will begin early next spring were made yesterday by Congressman Prentiss M. Brown, St. Ignace, when interviewed while enroute from Menominee to Munising.

Rep. Brown said that the postal departments recommendation that a building be constructed in Gladstone had been approved by the treasury department, in charge of all post office buildings, and the recommendation had been forwarded to the public works administration.

A press dispatch within the last week stated that the public works administration had allotted $53,500 for construction in Gladstone.

Several years ago an appropriation of $70,000 was approved for this purpose. Economy moves lopped off ten per cent, making the sum to be used here $63,500. The new plan being used now of erecting "modest buildings" not "monuments" has resulted in a further decrease.

At the time of the previous appropriation the government advertised for sites and eleven were offered here. The prices in general were too high and efforts were made to have the owners submit new bids. Approximately ten per cent of the total appropriation is usually expended for the site. The new policy states that the site is to be chosen with a view towards improving the postal service but need not necessarily be the most prominent or expensive corner.

Final preparations are now being made for the presentation of the sophomore class annual play, "Yimmie Jonson's Yob," tomorrow evening in the gymnasium of the high school.

A matinee performance for pupils of the Buckeye, First and Fourth Ward schools will be given this afternoon, beginning at 3:30 o'clock.

The play is a three-act comedy drama written by Lillian Mortimer. A clever plot is woven into the story which has pathos, laughter, exciting moments, love scenes and a stirring climax, all of the elements which go to make good entertainment. All of the character parts are strong, not a single weak one being found among the ten written into the play.

Direction is by Bertrand J. Henne and business and advertising is in charge of Conan E. Fisher. Serving on the committee on stage and properties are Henry Legault, manager, Robert Cripe, Julia Bonkowski, Verle Buckmaster and Allen Holman.

Advance ticket sale now being conducted is going well and is indicative of a capacity audience. Special inducements are being offered. A ticket bought for the sophomore play will also be good for the Freshman play, "The Deacon Entangled" which is to be presented on Friday, Dec. 8. The latter is also a three act play. Thus two full evenings of entertainment will be given for one admission. In addition the charge for tickets has also been reduced to a minimum.

A special musical program has been worked up for the play and includes a number of Swedish numbers. Preceding the opening curtain a Swedish Grand March by O. J. Lavender and Bjornebergarnes March will be played by the high school orchestra. In the intermission between the first and second acts "Barndoms Hemmit" by P. Wunck, Vad Som hande mig i gar and Have You Ever Been Lonely (English and Swedish) will be sung by the school girls' double quartet. Before the final curtain National Honor March and Thru Morris Dances will be played by the orchestra.

Petitions urging the paving of Highway US-2 with concrete from the Delta county line to Manistique as soon as possible and also incorporating a protest against any substantial change in the route as now established, were pressed into service yesterday by a committee of local taxpayers. The petitions are addressed jointly to the federal and Michigan state highway departments. The action is being taken in an effort to change plans recently announced to the effect that the route would be relocated from the Delta county line eastward to Thompson and then northeast along the lakeshore to Manistique. The petitions read as follows:

"We, the undersigned, taxpayers and voters of Schoolcraft county, respectfully petition that US-2 from the Delta county line to Manistique be paved with concrete as soon as possible.

"We also protest against any substantial change in the route now established, and in particular enter our emphatic protest against the proposed relocation of the most important section of this road across 13 miles of sand plains and barren country, which relocation would mean—

1. This relocation will make tourists and prospective settlers think the upper peninsula barren uninhabited country of sticks and burned-over sand plains, because they would hardly see an inhabitant from Isabella to Manistique, a distance of 25 miles.

2. Taking the highway away from the best farming section in Schoolcraft county and the village of Cooks, an important shipping point, the Indian Lake resorts, and the Big Spring state park, and routing it through the worst lands we have, is absurd, expensive to the government, and ruinous to local values and future development.

3. Duplication of the present route, every foot of which will still have to be maintained at public expense.

4. No shortening distance. (If necessary a five mile cut off on the present route would save two miles), making it shorter than the proposed relocation.

May Now Apply for Old Age Pensions

Beginning today, applications for old age pensions under the new pension law enacted by the last legislature will be received by Frank Fouchard, special investigator for the Schoolcraft county poor commission, it was announced yesterday. Persons desiring to apply are required to see Mr. Fouchard at the county infirmary office. Those eligible to apply must be citizens of this country and 70 years of age or over.

No investigations in regard to applications will be conducted prior to December 1 Mr. Fouchard stater, and hearings into doubtful cases will not be held until after the first of the year.

H. Hankin, or Mrs. Ernest Eklund, who will notify the collection agents of the address.

Government Control of Private Business New Order of Day--Wilson

Speaking on the general subject, "America's Changing Political Philosophy," Russell H. Wilson, local high school principal, delivered one of the most vivid and illuminating talks presented to the Manistique Woman's club this year. In view of his limited time which precluded a full and comprehensive discussion of his subject, Mr. Wilson specifically chose one phase of political philosophy--the control of private business in the interest of public welfare—a topic of all-importance and of exceptional timeliness inasmuch as the new National Industrial Recovery Act is one of the most revolutionary pieces of legislation dealing with this problem.

Tracing the development of the policy of the United States in relation to the control of private business, Mr. Wilson pointed out how the original laissez faire, or let alone policy, was originally a revolt against the burdensome restrictions of the middle ages; that the laissez faire philosophy was in control when our government was instituted; and that the conditions of that time, when industries were small and managed by their owners before the great modern inventions which now link us together were known, were favorable to laissez faire. As times changed, this highly individualistic philosophy has proved unsuited to meet the changing conditions, he declared.

Revolt Against Feudalism

The speaker showed how the laissez faire policy was a revolt against the feudalistic system of medieval times when rural inhabitants were known as serfs who were bound to the soil without choice, each tilling his plot of ground and giving a certain portion of the product to the lord by whom he was employed.

The towns were practically run by the merchant guilds which were organizations of those engaged in trade, members of which were subject to the most minute regulation as to their methods of conducting business, said the speaker. The merchant guilds were later supplanted by the craft guilds, he stated, which were organizations of workers in a particular craft, and speaking of the technicalities thereof in the classification of the workers as apprentices, journeymen, and masters, and of the strict enforcement of regulations within each trade pertaining to hours of work, quality of materials, method of manufacture, and in many instances, price of the product. While the feudal and guild systems were operative there was not much need for governmental regulation of the economic system, Mr. Wilson pointed out.

Changing economic conditions caused by the springing up of household manufacture and the increasing number of freed serfs who swarmed into towns, broke down this medieval system, and as a means of preventing the complete disintegration of the social and economic system the government found it necessary to enact laws regulating in great detail the economic life of the English nation, proceeding upon the theory that the desire for gain should be controlled in the interest of public welfare, declared the speaker.

Wages, commodity prices, to some extent articles of dress, and, for some classes, occupations, were all fixed by law. Eventually much resentment was aroused against many of these laws on the part of wage earners who were forced to buy the necessities of life at prices beyond their ability to pay according to the ages fixed by law. Even manufacturers found the laws burdensome and unduly restrictive. Thus in the eighteenth century, Mr. Wilson said, it gradually came to be held by many people that conditions had so changed that the economic life of the nation would be better off if these laws were removed.

Laissez Faire Trend

Eminent authors and philosophers took this opportunity to encourage the people in their fight for civil liberties, declared the speaker. Rousseau gave eloquent voice to the doctrine of natural rights as opposed to arbitrary rights of the king; Blackstone wrote of the "immutable laws of nature;" Jefferson appealed to the laws of nature in support of the colonies against the king; and the spirit of the time gave rise to Adam Smith's famous book, "The Wealth of Nations," expressing the philosophy of non-governmental interference. Thus it was that at the time of the founding of our nation, the laissez faire philosophy was gaining rapidly in England and even more rapidly in America, Mr. Wilson said.

The speaker then outlined the progress of the laissez faire philosophy in the United States showing how conditions were extremely favorable for its inception. He pointed out the strong fears of a centralized government by the Jeffersonian Democrats at the time of the framing of the constitution and the restriction of federal powers. States were given the jurisdiction over practically all problems affecting the people, he stated, naming the natural prejudice against strong national government inherited from the Revolutionary days and the fact of sheer geography which practically compelled people to look to their respective state governments for aid, as factors tending toward laissez faire.

Economic and social conditions also favored this philosophy, declared the speaker. It was the era of the pioneer. The discontented business man, farmer, or laborer, who found life hard in the east, could move westward where there was an abundance of free land and where he could find freedom and independence. It was the era of the individual, and rugged individualism was the order of the day. Factories were small and investment in capital goods was relatively light. If competition forced a marginal producer out of business, the small laborer quickly found work in other industries. The population was ninety per cent rural and corporate organization was largely unknown.

Mr. Wilson then traced the change away from this highly individualistic philosophy first in relation to conditions of labor when the factory system sprung up as a result of inventions, second in relation to business competition in which the theory of free competition was challenged and legislation such as the Sherman anti-trust act, the Clayton anti-trust act, the Federal trade commission act, and the creation of the interstate commerce commission, was passed to break up trusts and to establish fair practices of competition.

The speaker cited the history of the Standard Oil company as an example of monopolistic control, pointing out that its mushroom growth was largely the result of obtaining secret freight rebates from railroads as well as from good management. The ability to transport oil cheaper than their competitors and not because of the ability to refine cheaper made the Standard Oil company a great monopolistic organization, declared the speaker.

Thirdly the speaker traced the change away from the laissez faire philosophy in the field of investment finance, declaring that the new federal securities act marks a definite stop on the part of the federal government to protect the investor. The organization of great holding companies, of which the insull scheme was but one, has changed the old arithmetical equation of two plus two equals four to two companies plus two companies equals one holding company larger than six or eight operating companies, but to be supported by the four original companies.

Change Is Needed

In conclusion, Mr. Wilson declared, "I would be the last to under-rate the great service which laissez faire has been to the world. It broke the old restraints of the middle age system and gave the daring individual capitalist and merchant a chance. It helped to accumulate capital, stimulate scientific and technological progress, and added materially to the world's stock of goods. It was a fair theory as long as the conditions under which it was formulated existed.

"Its shortcomings were beclouded for a time because we were exploiting a rich continent, and our mistakes were more than counter balanced by the richness of our opportunities. But we have seen conditions change until it can no longer be said that 'Men do the greatest service to the public when they are thinking of nothing but their own gain.' I do not say that the governmental policies we have tried and are trying are a perfect solution of the problem. I merely say that the evidence of our own history shows that it is necessary for the government to control private business in the interest of public welfare.

"The time has come when, in the words of Stuart Chase, 'The American people must ask, What Is an economic system for?' It it to provide a field for our plungers in high finance to play their game more freely without regard to the interests of the people? Is it to permit indiscriminate attempts on the part of individuals and corporations to get rich by exploiting labor, or by disturbing legitimate business through unfair competition? It is none of these things.

"It is to provide food, shelter, clothing, and comforts in as dependable and adequate quantities as our natural resources and the state of technical arts will permit. When used as a channel for personal aggrandizement, a system's function and meaning collapse.

"As citizens of a great nation we must face this problem of function sanely and courageously. It will not do to attempt to solve it by the incantation of phrases and slogans bequeathed to us by another age. The tooth and claw, has failed to produce the results that were expected of it. The solution of our problem lies somewhere between the extreme individualism of laissez faire, on the one hand, and extreme socialization on the other. Just where the balance will be struck is for the American people to decide."

Mr. Wilson's address was preceded by a most complete and interesting report on the state federation meeting by Mrs. V. I. Hixson, local club president. Mrs. Hixson was a delegate of the Manistique club at the meeting held recently in Detroit.

Musical entertainment was provided by Mrs. E. C. Rupp who delightfully played two piano solos, Valse Brillante, and Ballet Music from Rosalind. EARLY START ON POSTOFFICE

Work on Federal Building Will Begin in Spring—Brown

Predictions that work on the federal post office building which has been alloted to Gladstone will begin early next spring were made yesterday by Congressman Prentiss M. Brown, St. Ignace, when interviewed while enroute from Menominee to Munising.

Rep. Brown said that the postal departments recommendation that a building be constructed in Gladstone had been approved by the treasury department, in charge of all post office buildings, and the recommendation had been forwarded to the public works administration.

A press dispatch within the last week stated that the public works administration had allotted $53,500 for construction in Gladstone.

Several years ago an appropriation of $70,000 was approved for this purpose. Economy moves lopped off ten per cent, making the sum to be used here $63,500. The new plan being used now of erecting "modest buildings" not "monuments" has resulted in a further decrease.

At the time of the previous appropriation the government advertised for sites and eleven were offered here. The prices in general were too high and efforts were made to have the owners submit new bids. Approximately ten per cent of the total appropriation is usually expended for the site. The new policy states that the site is to be chosen with a view towards improving the postal service but need not necessarily be the most prominent or expensive corner.

Final preparations are now being made for the presentation of the sophomore class annual play, "Yimmie Jonson's Yob," tomorrow evening in the gymnasium of the high school.

A matinee performance for pupils of the Buckeye, First and Fourth Ward schools will be given this afternoon, beginning at 3:30 o'clock.

The play is a three-act comedy drama written by Lillian Mortimer. A clever plot is woven into the story which has pathos, laughter, exciting moments, love scenes and a stirring climax, all of the elements which go to make good entertainment. All of the character parts are strong, not a single weak one being found among the ten written into the play.

Direction is by Bertrand J. Henne and business and advertising is in charge of Conan E. Fisher. Serving on the committee on stage and properties are Henry Legault, manager, Robert Cripe, Julia Bonkowski, Verle Buckmaster and Allen Holman.

Advance ticket sale now being conducted is going well and is indicative of a capacity audience. Special inducements are being offered. A ticket bought for the sophomore play will also be good for the Freshman play, "The Deacon Entangled" which is to be presented on Friday, Dec. 8. The latter is also a three act play. Thus two full evenings of entertainment will be given for one admission. In addition the charge for tickets has also been reduced to a minimum.

A special musical program has been worked up for the play and includes a number of Swedish numbers. Preceding the opening curtain a Swedish Grand March by O. J. Lavender and Bjornebergarnes March will be played by the high school orchestra. In the intermission between the first and second acts "Barndoms Hemmit" by P. Wunck, Vad Som hande mig i gar and Have You Ever Been Lonely (English and Swedish) will be sung by the school girls' double quartet. Before the final curtain National Honor March and Thru Morris Dances will be played by the orchestra.

Petitions urging the paving of Highway US-2 with concrete from the Delta county line to Manistique as soon as possible and also incorporating a protest against any substantial change in the route as now established, were pressed into service yesterday by a committee of local taxpayers. The petitions are addressed jointly to the federal and Michigan state highway departments. The action is being taken in an effort to change plans recently announced to the effect that the route would be relocated from the Delta county line eastward to Thompson and then northeast along the lakeshore to Manistique. The petitions read as follows:

"We, the undersigned, taxpayers and voters of Schoolcraft county, respectfully petition that US-2 from the Delta county line to Manistique be paved with concrete as soon as possible.

"We also protest against any substantial change in the route now established, and in particular enter our emphatic protest against the proposed relocation of the most important section of this road across 13 miles of sand plains and barren country, which relocation would mean—

1. This relocation will make tourists and prospective settlers think the upper peninsula barren uninhabited country of sticks and burned-over sand plains, because they would hardly see an inhabitant from Isabella to Manistique, a distance of 25 miles.

2. Taking the highway away from the best farming section in Schoolcraft county and the village of Cooks, an important shipping point, the Indian Lake resorts, and the Big Spring state park, and routing it through the worst lands we have, is absurd, expensive to the government, and ruinous to local values and future development.

3. Duplication of the present route, every foot of which will still have to be maintained at public expense.

4. No shortening distance. (If necessary a five mile cut off on the present route would save two miles), making it shorter than the proposed relocation.

May Now Apply for Old Age Pensions

Beginning today, applications for old age pensions under the new pension law enacted by the last legislature will be received by Frank Fouchard, special investigator for the Schoolcraft county poor commission, it was announced yesterday. Persons desiring to apply are required to see Mr. Fouchard at the county infirmary office. Those eligible to apply must be citizens of this country and 70 years of age or over.

No investigations in regard to applications will be conducted prior to December 1 Mr. Fouchard stater, and hearings into doubtful cases will not be held until after the first of the year.

H. Hankin, or Mrs. Ernest Eklund, who will notify the collection agents of the address.

Speaking on the general subject, "America's Changing Political Philosophy," Russell H. Wilson, local high school principal, delivered one of the most vivid and illuminating talks presented to the Manistique Woman's club this year. In view of his limited time which precluded a full and comprehensive discussion of his subject, Mr. Wilson specifically chose one phase of political philosophy—the control of private business in the interest of public welfare—a topic of all-importance and of exceptional timeliness inasmuch as the new National Industrial Recovery Act is one of the most revolutionary pieces of legislation dealing with this problem.

Tracing the development of the policy of the United States in relation to the control of private business, Mr. Wilson pointed out how the original laissez faire, or let alone policy, was originally a revolt against the burdensome restrictions of the middle ages; that the laissez faire philosophy was in control when our government was instituted; and that the conditions of that time, when industries were small and managed by their owners before the great modern inventions which now link us together were known, were favorable to laissez faire. As times changed, this highly individualistic philosophy has proved unsuited to meet the changing conditions, he declared.

The speaker showed how the laissez faire policy was a revolt against the feudalistic system of medieval times when rural inhabitants were known as serfs who were bound to the soil without choice, each tilling his plot of ground and giving a certain portion of the product to the lord by whom he was employed.

The towns were practically run by the merchant guilds which were organizations of those engaged in trade, members of which were subject to the most minute regulation as to their methods of conducting business, said the speaker. The merchant guilds were later supplanted by the craft guilds, he stated, which were organizations of workers in a particular craft, and speaking of the technicalities thereof in the classification of the workers as apprentices, journeymen, and masters, and of the strict enforcement of regulations within each trade pertaining to hours of work, quality of materials, method of manufacture, and in many instances, price of the product. While the feudal and guild systems were operative there was not much need for governmental regulation of the economic system, Mr. Wilson pointed out.

Changing economic conditions caused by the springing up of household manufacture and the increasing number of freed serfs who swarmed into towns, broke down this medieval system, and as a means of preventing the complete disintegration of the social and economic system the government found it necessary to enact laws regulating in great detail the economic life of the English nation, preceeding upon the theory that the desire for gain should be controlled in the interest of public welfare, declared the speaker.

Wages, commodity prices, to some extent articles of dress, and, for some classes, occupations, were all fixed by law. Eventually much resentment was aroused against many of these laws on the part of wage earners who were forced to buy the necessities of life at prices beyond their ability to pay according to the ages fixed by law. Even manufacturers found the laws burdensome and unduly restrictive. Thus in the eighteenth century, Mr. Wilson said, it gradually came to be held by many people that conditions had so changed that the economic life of the nation would be better off if these laws were removed.

Laissez Faire Trend

Eminent authors and philosophers took this opportunity to encourage the people in their fight for civil liberties, declared the speaker. Rousseau gave eloquent voice to the doctrine of natural rights as opposed to arbitrary rights of the king; Blackstone wrote of the "immutable laws of nature;" Jefferson appealed to the laws of nature in support of the colonies against the king; and the spirit of the time gave rise to Adam Smith's famous book, "The Wealth of Nations," expressing the philosophy of non-governmental interference. Thus it was that at the time of the founding of our nation, the laissez faire philosophy was gaining rapidly in England and even more rapidly in America, Mr. Wilson said.

The speaker then outlined the progress of the laissez faire philosophy in the United States showing how conditions were extremely favorable for its inception. He pointed out the strong fears of a centralized government by the Jeffersonian Democrats at the time of the framing of the constitution and the restriction of federal powers. States were given the jurisdiction over practically all problems affecting the people, he stated, naming the natural prejudice against strong national government inherited from the Revolutionary days and the fact of sheer geography which practically compelled people to look to their respective state governments for aid, as factors tending toward laissez faire.

Economic and social conditions also favored this philosophy, declared the speaker. It was the era of the pioneer. The discontented business man, farmer, or laborer, who found life hard in the east, could move westward where there was an abundance of free land and where he could find freedom and independence. It was the era of the individual, and rugged individualism was the order of the day. Factories were small and investment in capital goods was relatively light. If competition forced a marginal producer out of business, the small laborer quickly found work in other industries. The population was ninety per cent rural and corporate organization was largely unknown.

Mr. Wilson then traced the change away from this highly individualistic philosophy first in relation to conditions of labor when the factory system sprung up as a result of inventions, second in relation to business competition in which the theory of free competition was challenged and legislation such as the Sherman anti-trust act, the Clayton anti-trust act, the Federal trade commission act, and the creation of the interstate commerce commission, was passed to break up trusts and to establish fair practices of competition.

The speaker cited the history of the Standard Oil company as an example of monopolistic control, pointing out that its mushroom growth was largely the result of obtaining secret freight rebates from railroads as well as from good management. The ability to transport oil cheaper than their competitors and not because of the ability to refine cheaper made the Standard Oil company a great monopolistic organization, declared the speaker.

Thirdly the speaker traced the change away from the laissez faire philosophy in the field of investment finance, declaring that the new federal securities act marks a definite stop on the part of the federal government to protect the investor. The organization of great holding companies, of which the Insull scheme was but one, has changed the old arithmetical equation of two plus two equals four to two companies plus two companies equals one holding company larger than six or eight operating companies, but to be supported by the four original companies.

Change Is Needed

In conclusion, Mr. Wilson declared, "I would be the last to under-rate the great service which laissez faire has been to the world. It broke the old restraints of the middle age system and gave the daring individual capitalist and merchant a chance. It helped to accumulate capital, stimulate scientific and technological progress, and added materially to the world's stock of goods. It was a fair theory as long as the conditions under which it was formulated existed.

"Its shortcomings were beclouded for a time because we were exploiting a rich continent, and our mistakes were more than counter balanced by the richness of our opportunities. But we have seen conditions change until it can no longer be said that 'Men do the greatest service to the public when they are thinking of nothing but their own gain.' I do not say that the governmental policies we have tried and are trying are a perfect solution of the problem. I merely say that the evidence of our own history shows that it is necessary for the government to control private business in the interest of public welfare.

"The time has come when, in the words of Stuart Chase, 'The American people must ask, What is an economic system for?' It it to provide a field for our plungers in high finance to play their game more freely without regard to the interests of the people? Is it to permit indiscriminate attempts on the part of individuals and corporations to get rich by exploiting labor, or by disturbing legitimate business through unfair competition? It is none of these things.

"It is to provide food, shelter, clothing, and comforts in as dependable and adequate quantities as our natural resources and the state of technical arts will permit. When used as a channel for personal aggrandizement, a system's function and meaning collapse.

"As citizens of a great nation we must face this problem of function sanely and courageously. It will not do to attempt to solve it by the incantation of phrases and slogans bequeathed to us by another age. The tooth and claw, has failed to produce the results that were expected of it. The solution of our problem lies somewhere betweeu the extreme individualism of laissez faire, on the one hand, and extreme socialization on the other. Just where the balance will be struck is for the American people to decide."

Mr. Wilson's address was preceded by a most complete and interesting report on the state federation meeting by Mrs. V. I. Hixson, local club president. Mrs. Hixson was a delegate of the Manistique club at the meeting held recently in Detroit.

Musical entertainment was provided by Mrs. E. C. Rupp who delightfully played two piano solos, Valse Brillante, and Ballet Music from Rosalind. Following the address of the principal speaker, refreshments were served from a tible prettily decorated with pink rose buds and pink tapers. Mrs. R. B. Waddell and Mrs. G. C. Fowler presided.

BY JOHN L. COOLEY
(Associated Press Financial Writer)

New York, Nov. 15 (AP)—Speculative markets again failed to be drawn higher by dollar weakness today. Some staples were fairly firm, but wheat sagged a couple of cents a bushel and cotton was a narrow mover. Stocks for the second day in a row closed mildly lower, while U. S. government bonds as well as other gilt edgers suffered further losses. Silver gyrated widely.

The R. F. C. left its gold purchasing price unchanged at $33.56 an ounce, thus permitting the inference that Washington had sought to break the dollar's decline. However, foreign currencies rallied vigorously, which meant another set of new highs. On the French franc measuring stick, American money, at the franc's high, had a gold value of less than 60 cents. Sterling crossed $5.40, but still there were no indications that London was ready to intervene.

Stocks shifted narrowly throughout the day, with the trend slightly favoring the offside. Few of the losses exceeded a point, though in this group were several prominent rails, including Santa Fe, New York Central and Union Pacific. Consolidated Gas of New York was down nearly a point, Western Union lost about 2 and corn products and Case similar amounts. Metals sagged, but oils improved. U. S. Steel, Westinghouse, Union Carbide, General Motors (ex-dividend), Du Pont, General Electric and Union Carbide yielded fractions. National Distillers, U. S. Smelting and American Can were moderate gainers. Sales totaled 1,353,460 shaers.

CHICAGO GRAIN

Lowest prices of the day in wheat were reached shortly before trading ended with general lack of confidence shown on the part of speculative buyers, and with the market largely ignoring the gyrations of British exchange rates. A late discouraging factor was announcement that a cargo of spring wheat had been loaded at Duluth for shipment to Chicago and that durum wheat from Canada was being bought for import to Minneapolis.

Wheat closed nervous, 1 7-8 to 2 3-8 cents under yesterday's finish, corn 1 3-8 to 1 3-4 down, oats 1¼ to 1½ off, and provisions varying from 17 cents decline to 7 cents advance.

Corn and oats prices followed the action of wheat, despite wintry weather likely to increase feeding demand.

Provisions averaged lower, influenced mainly by downturns of cereals.

New York, Nov. 15 (AP)—The bond market again looked through dark glasses today and generally declining prices ruled in all domestic categories.

The dollar continued to drop sharply in foreign exchange markets notwithstanding the fact that the R. F. C., for the second time since the gold control program was inaugurated, failed to boost the price of the metal. Fresh liquidation in most sections of listed loans, dealers said, was based on inflationary implications of sagging dollar rates.

There were a few mild rallies in the final hour, but the average for 60 domestic corporate issues recorded another loss of sixtenths of a point. Sales totaled $16,653,000, par value.

While most United States government securities were again in supply, the selling volume was only about $4,400,000 against nearly $9,000,000 yesterday. Recessions in the federal section ranged from 1-32nd to 18-32nds of a point.

ey! Got a moment?"

Down came the outspread pages of a newspaper. Down came the tipped-back chair. A young man with a brown felt hat tipped back at a rakish angle upon a head of very red hair emerged from behind the newspaper. He crushed out his cigaret and got to his feet.

"Yes, Mr. Paxton," said J. Randolph Gainey. "Sure! Is there anything—?"

He did not finish the sentence. A pair of eyes of unusual blueness searched Paxton's. J. Randolph Gainey was slender and slightly below average height. His cheeks and the ridge of his nose were amply sprinkled with the freckles that so often accompany red hair and a fair skin. J. Randolph Gainey was 22 years old but he had packed into those 22 years a list of activities that was amazing. Confidence and energy he never lacked. One subject, and only one, was there on which J. Randolph Gainey was susceptible to the world's darts and that, at least in the office of the newspaper, was unguessed. No one on the Post knew that the "J" in the wirey little reporter's name stood for Jeremiah. No one would ever know it if it were possible for J. Randolph Gainey to prevent it.

"Gainey," Jim Paxton was saying, "this is Mr. Bannister—David Bannister. Used to work here. Since then he's been to New York and written some novels and made a name for himself. Been to Mexico, too, and Hollywood and I don't know where all."

• • •

A cheerful grin overspread the reporter's face. "Sure," he said. "I saw the picture they made from 'Cheerful Liar.' Called it 'Slave of Desire,' didn't they? It was a good picture, too. I heard that you were in Tremont—"

"Wait a minute," Paxton said. "I'd better get Austin." Austin was the assistant city editor, carrying on in place of his chief.

In another moment the four men stood together while Paxton explained Banister's status as a sort of ex-officio member of the staff. Austin was nodding understandingly and Gainey looked perplexed. Some of this perplexity faded as Paxton repeated, "It's still your story, Gainey. Banister's not to write any of the copy. He's to work with you, take part of the burden. Who's down at headquarters now, by the way?"

"Cunningham," Austin informed him.

"I came in to write the lead," Gainey explained. He glanced at the clock on the opposite wall—a quick, nervous glance. "Guess I'd better be getting back," he went on.

"Banister will go with you," Paxton spoke tersely. "And see if you can't get something this time! Make Henley talk. He must have something he's holding back! Try to get the description of that girl they're looking for. How do they expect to find her if they don't let us know what she looks like? For God's sake, give us something new for the final—!"

The assistant city editor ran to the desk and picked up the instrument. "Hello, hello!" he said nervously. "Yes—this is Austin."

The others drifted nearer, as though drawn by an irresistible force. Now Austin was pulling copy paper toward him, one hand holding the receiver to his ear.

"Yes," he said excitedly, "I got it. Go on!" With a quick half-turn toward Paxton he exclaimed, "they've just brought that girl in—the one they've been looking for!"

Price Irregularity Occurs On the Curb

BY BERNARD S. O'HARA
(Associated Press Financial Writer)

New York, Nov. 15 (AP)—Further price irregularity occurred on the curb exchange today. Quotations were fairly steady at the outset but a desultory drift toward lower levels followed. Trends shifted constantly and a slight stiffening of prices came at the finish.

Utilities and specialties closed moderately lower. Alcohols showed a fairly steady trend while oils and some of the metals advanced modestly.

A number of inactive issues among utilities and others suffered losses of 2 or more points and included Commonwealth Edison, Consolidated Gas of Baltimore, General Tire & Rubber and National Bond and Share. Columbia Gas & Electric preferred lost 6¼ points.

Recessions of fractions to a point or so were registered by Electric Bond and Share, Dow Chemical and Aluminum Company of America. Hiram Walker ruled about unchanged while small advances were marked up by Gulf Oil, Newmont, Standard Oil of Ohio and Swift International.

Transfers declined to approximately 205,000 shares compared with 284,000 for Tuesday.

(Associated Press Financial Writer)

New York, Nov. 15 (AP)—Speculative markets again failed to be drawn higher by dollar weakness today. Some staples were fairly firm, but wheat sagged a couple of cents a bushel and cotton was a narrow mover. Stocks for the second day in a row closed mildly lower, while U. S. government bonds as well as other gilt edgers suffered further losses. Silver gyrated widely.

The R. F. C. left its gold purchasing price unchanged at $33.56 an ounce, thus permitting the inference that Washington had sought to break the dollar's decline. However, foreign currencies rallied vigorously, which meant another set of new highs. On the French franc measuring stick, American money, at the franc's high, had a gold value of less than 60 cents. Sterling crossed $5.40, but still there were no indications that London was ready to intervene.

Stocks shifted narrowly throughout the day, with the trend slightly favoring the offside. Few of the losses exceeded a point, though in this group were several prominent rails, including Santa Fe, New York Central and Union Pacific. Consolidated Gas of New York was down nearly a point, Western Union lost about 2 and corn products and Case similar amounts. Metals sagged, but oils improved. U. S. Steel, Westinghouse, Union Carbide, General Motors (ex-dividend), Du Pont, Gensral Electric and Union Carbide yielded fractions. National Distillers, U. S. Smelting and American Can were moderate gainers. Sales totaled 1,353,460 shaers.

CHICAGO GRAIN
Lowest prices of the day in wheat were reached shortly before trading ended with general lack of confidence shown on the part of speculative buyers, and with the market largely ignoring the gyrations of British exchange rates. A late disconcerting factor was announcement that a cargo of spring wheat had been loaded at Duluth for shipment to Chicago and that durum wheat from Canada was being bought for import to Minneapolis.
Wheat closed nervous, 1 7-8 to 2 3-8 cents under yesterday's finish, corn 1 3-8 to 1 5-8 down, oats 1¼ to 1½ off, and provisions varying from 17 cents decline to 7 cents advance.
Corn and oats prices followed the action of wheat, despite wintry weather likely to increase feeding demand.
Provisions averaged lower, influenced mainly by downturns of cereals.

BY VICTOR EUBANK
(Associated Press Financial Writer)

New York, Nov. 15 (AP)—The bond market again looked through dark glasses today and generally declining prices ruled in all domestic categories.

The dollar continued to drop sharply in foreign exchange markets notwithstanding the fact that the R. F. C., for the second time since the gold control program was inaugurated, failed to boost the price of the metal. Fresh liquidation in most sections of listed loans, dealers said, was based on inflationary implications of sagging dollar rates.

There were a few mild rallies in the final hour, but the average for 60 domestic corporate issues recorded another loss of sixtenths of a point. Sales totaled $16,653,000, par value.

While most United States government securities were again in supply, the selling volume was only about $4,400,000 against nearly $9,000,000 yesterday. Recessions in the federal section ranged from 1-32nd to 18-32nds of a point.

ey! Got a moment?"

Down came the outspread pages of a newspaper. Down came the tipped-back chair. A young man with a brown felt hat tipped back at a rakish angle upon a head of very red hair emerged from behind the newspaper. He crushed out his cigaret and got to his feet.

"Yes, Mr. Paxton," said J. Randolph Gainey. "Sure! Is there anything—?"

He did not finish the sentence. A pair of eyes of unusual blueness searched Paxton's. J. Randolph Gainey was slender and slightly below average height. His cheeks and the ridge of his nose were amply sprinkled with the freckles that so often accompany red hair and a fair skin. J. Randolph Gainey was 22 years old but he had packed into those 22 years a list of activities that was amazing. Confidence and energy he never lacked. One subject, and only one, was there on which J. Randolph Gainey was susceptible to the world's darts and that, at least in the office of the newspaper, was unguessed. No one on the Post knew that the "J" in the wirey little reporter's name stood for Jeremiah. No one would ever know it if it were possible for J. Randolph Gainey to prevent it.

"Gainey," Jim Paxton was saying, "this is Mr. Bannister—David Bannister. Used to work here. Since then he's been to New York and written some novels and made a name for himself. Been to Mexico, too, and Hollywood and I don't know where all."

• • •

A cheerful grin overspread the reporter's face. "Sure," he said. "I saw the picture they made from 'Cheerful Liar.' Called it 'Slave of Desire,' didn't they? It was a good picture, too. I heard that you were in Tremont—"

"Wait a minute," Paxton said, "I'd better get Austin." Austin was the assistant city editor, carrying on in place of his chief.

In another moment the four men stood together while Paxton explained Banister's status as a sort of ex-officio member of the staff. Austin was nodding understandingly and Gainey looked perplexed. Some of this perplexity faded as Paxton repeated, "It's still your story, Gainey. Banister's not to write any of the copy. He's to work with you, take part of the burden. Who's down at headquarters now, by the way?"

"Cunningham," Austin informed him.

"I came in to write the lead," Gainey explained. He glanced at the clock on the opposite wall—a quick, nervous glance. "Guess I'd better be getting back," he went on.

"Banister will go with you," Paxton spoke tersely. "And see if you can't get something this time! Make Henley talk. He must have something he's holding back! Try to get the description of that girl they're looking for. How do they expect to find her if they don't let us know what she looks like? For God's sake, give us something new for the final—!"

The assistant city editor ran to the desk and picked up the instrument. "Hello, hello!" he said nervously. "Yes—this is Austin."

The others drifted nearer, as though drawn by an irresistible force. Now Austin was pulling copy paper toward him, one hand holding the receiver to his ear.

"Yes," he said excitedly, "I got it. Go on!" With a quick half-turn toward Paxton he exclaimed. "They've just brought that girl in—the one they've been looking for!"

Price Irregularity Occurs On the Curb

BY BERNARD S. O'HARA
(Associated Press Financial Writer)

New York, Nov. 15 (AP)—Further price irregularity occurred on the curb exchange today. Quotations were fairly steady at the outset but a desultory drift toward lower levels followed. Trends shifted constantly and a slight stiffening of prices came at the finish.

Utilities and specialties closed moderately lower. Alcohols showed a fairly steady trend while oils and some of the metals advanced modestly.

A number of inactive issues among utilities and others suffered losses of 2 or more points and included Commonwealth Edison, Consolidated Gas of Baltimore, General Tire & Rubber and National Bond and Share. Columbia Gas & Electric preferred lost 6¼ points.

Recessions of fractions to a point or so were registered by Electric Bond and Share, Dow Chemical and Aluminum Company of America. Hiram Walker ruled about unchanged while small advances were marked up by Gulf Oil, Newmont, Standard Oil of Ohio and Swift International.

CUBS TO GET CHUCK KLEIN?

Reports Say Herman and Cash Will Figure in Deal

Philadelphia, Nov. 15 (AP)—In a deal with the St. Louis Cardinals, the Phillies today took another step in their reconstruction work for 1934, while rumor persisted that Chuck Klein, slugging outfielder, would be involved in the next transaction of the local National League club.

The trade, reported since the end of the 1933 campaign, brings Catcher Jimmy Wilson back to this city where he started his rise in the big leagues, and sends Virgil "Spud" Davis, also a backstop, and Eddie Delker, utility infielder, to St. Louis.

Wilson's transfer is the second addition to the Phils' roster made this week. Three days ago, Henry R. Oana, Hawaiian outfielder in the Pacific Coast league, was obtained from Portland for Jimmy McLeod, third baseman, and pitcher Frank Ragland.

Reports about Klein have the Chicago Cubs heading the list as a possible destination. Baseball observers say they expect Klein, who led the senior circuit in batting last season, would wear a Cub uniform in 1934, while Babe Herman, another player and some cash, would come to Philadelphia.

The Cards-Phils trade in catchers gives back to each club the backstops they exchanged in 1928 when Wilson was sent to St. Louis and Davis came here with Hurst and Homer Peel.

Wilson at that time had been playing with the Phils five years after his purchase in 1923 from New Haven of the Eastern league where he broke into organized baseball three seasons before. Noted for his ability to handle pitchers, it is understood Wilson will have, as part of his chores here, the development of the young hurlers.

The Cards, in return, are getting back a heavy-hitting young catcher, who finished second to Klein in the 1933 batting race. He has been in organized baseball since 1926 and has played the big league game since 1928.

DISCUSS TRADES

Galveston, Tex., Nov. 15 (AP)—Minor league baseball magnates today heard William G. Bramham, president of the National Association of Baseball Leagues, hail the Shaughnessy pennant playoff plan and "shoestring operators," discussed important player trades and then waited for a report from an executive committee.

The St. Louis Cardinals and the Philadelphia National League club were involved in the principal trade announced.

Arlett Traded

It also was announced that the Phillies had purchased Henry Prince Oana, Hawaiian outfielder, from the Portland club of the Coast league, for players and an unnamed amount of cash. Portland traded John Monroe, second baseman, to Albany of the International league, for Frank Packard, infielder.

Atlanta of the Southern Association bought Art Jacobs, a left handed twirler, from Portland.

"Buzz" Arlett, outfielder, and John Prudhomme, pitcher, went from Baltimore to the Birmingham club of the Southern Association, in exchange for Woodley Hornathy, outfielder, and Bill Lawood, catcher.

The executive committee retired behind closed doors to consider an appeal from Art Shires, Jim Lindsey, Gordon Slade and Charles Wilson, formerly members of the Columbus club of the American Association, who were fined and banned from the circuit last summer for allegedly making false reports concerning salaries.

John D. Martin, president of the Southern Association, was named to replace Warren C. Giles of Rochester at the hearing on the American Association players. Giles was ineligible because of his connections with the Rochester club, the team with which Shires and Lindsey now are playing.

The executive committee is composed of Giles, J. Alvin Gardner, president of the Texas league, and Dale Gear, president of the Western league. It had before it cases against Harold Meyer, vice president of the Wilkesbarre club of the New York-Pennsylvania league, accused of a salary violation, and against members of the Pine Bluff team of the Dixie league who disbanded when, they asserted, they were not paid for their services.

In College Grid Camps

South Bend, Ind., Nov. 15 (AP)—Snow and cold drove Notre Dame's football squad indoors today for the third straight day, much to Coach Hunk Anderson's disgust. He is afraid the Irish will have to meet Northwestern without a real tough practice under their belts.

Champaign, Ill., Nov. 15 (AP)—Illinois drilled again today on a defense against Chicago plays, with special emphasis on a method of halting Pete Zimmer, who scored against the Illini in the first few minutes of last year's game. Bart Cummings and Dave Cook were given a long drill on place kicking.

Lafayette, Ind., Nov. 15 (AP)—The Purdue passing attack that worked against Notre Dame was polished in practice tonight as an offensive threat to be used in the game with Iowa Saturday. Fred Hecker, Duane Purvis and Jim Carter all tossed long and short passes in the drill.

Bloomington, Ind., Nov. 15 (AP)—The reserves received their share of attention in the Indiana university football camp today as the coaches sought capable defense replacements to use against Xavier university. While the first string eleven worked on smoothing its offense, the reserves got a long defensive drill.

Columbus, O., Nov. 15, (AP)—A varsity-freshman scrimmage with upper classmen on the offense, featured today's grid workout at Ohio State University preparing for Saturday invasion of Wisconsin. The lone touchdown on the ice-covered field came an a pass from Frank Fisch to Ted Rosequist, netting 30 yards. After the scrimmage the squad saw motion pictures of Wisconsin plays.

Iowa City, Ia., Nov. 15 (AP)—The Iowa football squad received its only hard workout of the week today as Coach Ossie Solem took them outdoors for a long offensive and defensive drill.

Minneapolis, Nov. 15 (AP)—Another little brown jug crusade, involving a Minnesota defiance of Michigan's reputation takes 33 Gophers away from home Thursday night for apparently the best Maroon and Gold chance to snare the Wolverines since 1927.

Madison, Wis., Nov. 15 (AP)—Coach Spears revised the Wisconsin defense today and it produced marked results when pitted against the frosh eleven in scrimmage. The yearlings, using Ohio State plays, were stopped effectively in both the running and aerial game.

Evanston, Ill., Nov. 15 (AP)—Northwestern's Wildcats engaged in a long offensive scrimmage today, seeking to generate enough punch to do some scoring against Notre Dame Saturday. The drill was held in Patten gymiasium.

Chicago, Nov. 15 (AP)—The freshmen failed to come close to stopping Chicago's regulars today in a stiff scrimmage session. Ed Cullen remained a quarterback and probably will direct the Maroons in their attempt to score their first Big Ten victory at the expense of Illinois Saturday. The yearlings gave a demonstration of Illinois formations, walking through plays as the varsity looked on.

Alabama Tackle Comes By Giant Size Honestly

His father, who is sheriff of Green county, Alabama, weighs 345 and local tradition has it that he has never learned his own strength.

Pro Football Is Marquette Captains' Game

Pinehurst, N. C., Nov. 15 (AP)—Paul Runyan and Willie MacFarlane, who teamed to take first money in the pro best ball event, shared top place in the individual play with Joe Turnesa as the mid-south open golf championship wound up today in a triple tie for the second successive year.

Kirkwood Erratic

Turnesa, most consistent of the golfing Turnesa brothers of Elmsford, N. Y., was the only player in the field of 130 to break par, shaving two strokes off it with a morning round of 69. He slipped to 71 in the afternoon, however, getting six on par-four home hole, and Runyan, who fired 72 on his first round, caught him with a par round of 71.

Joe Kirkwood, of Chicago, started out by holing a mashie niblick shot at the third for an eagle deuce. He then roared on through 12 holes, playing them four under par. But he became erratic, winding up with 71 for the opening round and taking 75 in the afternoon for 146.

By winning the pro best ball yesterday and tieing for first place today, Runyan and MacFarlane got the major share of $2,300 in prize money offered for the two day's play. Their 132 best ball score brought them $500. Runyan was also top money winner in the national open at Washington which inaugurated the winter's play.

George Rudness Trying Out For Basketball Team

While at Negaunee, Rudness played basketball with the high school team four years and was a member of the squad that won the Class B championship in 1930. He is a brother of Edward V. Rudness, Escanaba.

BY PAUL MICKELSON
(Associated Press Sports Writer)

Chicago, Nov. 15 (AP)—Bones may be cracked and stretchers called in when the Minnesota-Michigan steamrollers of football collide at Ann Arbor Saturday, but you can count on "Pug" Lund to stick in the battle.

The flashy Minnesota back has played 340 out of a possible 360 minutes, going the full route against Indiana, Purdue, Pittsburgh and Northwestern, and all but 10 minutes in each of the South Dakota and Iowa games after a Gopher victory was assured. But that performance isn't half the story. The other part is his courage.

Display of Courage

In his first game against South Dakota in 1932, "Pug" discovered that one of his front teeth was broken off. The nerve was exposed and the pain must have been severe enough to make any football player call for time—that is, all except the "Pugger." He countered by carrying the ball on six straight plays, then he hesitated just long enough to yank the tooth out.

Banged up ankles, bruised ribs and tackles that would make the average type of player fold up for the day have seemed to add only that much more impetus to his drives for Minnesota points.

Everyone at Minnesota was "Mister" to the shy, ruddy faced blonde when he first came into the Gopher camp from Rice Lake, Wis., and said he'd like to try out for the team. Although he wasn't a big fellow with his 5 feet 10 height and 175 pounds, he has developed quickly into one of the great gridiron stars of the northland. His dashes and quick, accurate kicks will be something for the undefeated Wolverines to worry about when they try to stem the Gopher tide and march on to their second straight Big Ten title Saturday.

Windsor Bulldogs Grab First Place

Windsor, Ont., Nov. 15 (AP)—The Windsor Bulldogs went into a tie for first place for the International Hockey league tonight by overwhelming the London Tecumsehs 6 to 0. The victory was the most one-sided recorded in the league so far and the damage was all done in less than five minutes of play in the second period.

Windsor took a 1-0 lead in the first frame when Russell Blinco tallied on a pass from Whitey Fields. The same combination started the scoring in 13:28 of the second period. A minute later Fields scored, then Frank Steele, Andy Bellemer and Harold Starr whipped in goals at short intervals.

Their battle Nov. 18 at Ann Arbor with the mighty Michigan team will climax an extended period of exposure to practice field and newspaper "riding."

It dates back to the scoreless tie with Northwestern in which the Wildcats dragged the Gophers down into a slough of miscues that gave what little glory there was to the former.

So the Michigan game, on which may hinge the Big Ten championship, will at least give the young Gophers a chance to get out of range of the sarcastic coaches.

Nobody seems to give the outfit much credit for beating Iowa and Pitt, along with South Dakota State, because they've suffered three ties; first with the mediocre Indiana eleven, then with the potentially great Purdue squad, and lastly with the fumbling Wildcats.

And considering the record of recent Michigan-Minnesota encounters which is crowded with games lost by narrow margins to the Wolverines, the outlook is none too good fr a counteriritant.

INJURED STARS ARE IMPROVING

Wolverines Work Out in Yost Field House; Fear Passes

The Michigan line is considered strong enough to deal with the thundering herd, even with Pug Lund in the lineup, so the chief worry is to bring the Michigan offensive to a scoring pitch and to develop a pass defense to cope with the Gopher overhead game. The Northmen are expected to resort to passing any time the ball gets inside the 35-yard line.

Both backs and linemen today were given more drill in blocking, followed by a rehearsal of the hundred or more plays from which Quarterback Bill Renner may select to carry out the Michigan attack.

Ottey Leads A Strong Spartan Harrier Team

East Lansing, Mich., (AP)—Michigan State, the Middle-West's annual threat to Eastern supremacy in cross country, is sending another great harrier squad to New York Nov. 20 to compete in the national collegiate championship.

Heading the Michigan State team will be Thomas C. Ottey, the blond Philadelphian who has captured all honors in Middle-West competition again this year. It will be Ottey's second appearance at historic Van Cortlandt Park. He took a third last year in the national meet.

Ran in Olympics

Ottey will invade the East with a great season behind him. He has finished first in two successive dual meets with Michigan and Notre Dame. The closest any runner has been to his flying heels at the finish was 300 yards.

Ottey will be remembered as the American 10,000-meter champion. He placed ninth in the Olympic meet at Los Angeles, falling behind his sturdier European competitors.

Three more Spartans are likely to finish up in the money in the eastern meet. They are Otto Pongrace, veteran half mile ace at State; and the newcomers, John Hammer and Edward Bechtold. Walter Hertzler and Charles Dennis complete the State team.

Michigan State's bid for the team championship will be the third since 1929. The Spartans captured the individual title in 1930 when Clark Chamberlain finished ahead of the field. Chamberlain was second the following year.

State placed second in team competition in 1929 when Lauren P. Brown, the present Spartan cross-country coach, ran third and Chamberlain fourth. Ted Willmarth was eighth the same year. Brown's team last year rated fourth in team honors.

Ottey may recapture the individual title that Chamberlain formerly held for Michigan State. The rangy Spartan underwent a major operation last spring that threatened to put him off his cross-country stride, but recovered his old form before mid-season this year.

The total pins score was 2761 for Argonne and 2659 for Underwood. Peterson for Argonne scored games of 223 and 209 but dropped to a poor 130 in the third game.

In another match City Bottling Works defeated Andrews Furniture two games to one but were outscored 2491 to 2525. Klinger rolled a 235 game for Andrews and Bink got a 228 score for City Bottling. Escanaba Gridiron Team Has Balance, Report Discloses

The Escanaba high school football season netted a profit of $357.78 in 1933, according to the athletic association report filed yesterday by Harry Henkin, athletic association treasurer, and Donald Norval, student activities fund treasurer.

The financial report is considered particularly encouraging in view of the fact that many upper peninsula schools reported deficits for the football season just closed. The report also proved that Escanaba is a good football town as profits were made on home games, whereas many upper peninsula schools have decided to seek most of their games away from home for next year because their home games failed to make expenses this season.

The Eskymos played six of their seven games at home and that they were able to finish the season with a sizeable surplus in spite of inclement weather conditions Saturday after Saturday is considered particularly noteworthy.

Nahma Opens Cage Schedule Friday

Nahma, Nov. 15, (Special)—Friday night the Nahma cagers will be given their initial test against the Cooks high school. The sawmill town has one of its best teams in the history of the school, and are facing a tough schedule.

The team consists of only one letter man from last year, but at present the team works like a bunch of veterans. In a practice tilt, the high school defeated the alumni 23 to 26, overcoming the sharp shooting of Ranguette, former Nahma star. The lineup against Cooks is Lambert and Bedard, forwards, Druding and Hebert, guards, and Bradish, center.

SPARTANS WILL TRAVEL IN '34

Home Schedules Failed to Receive Enough Support

East Lansing, Nov. 15 (AP)—Although Michigan State's first string returned to football activity here today, plans for the 1934 gridiron campaign commanded major interest.

The possibility was seen that the Spartans may take to the rails next year to play most if not all of their major games on the road. It cropped out of a conference between members of the coaching staf and Ralph H. Young, director of athletics.

Young frankly presented the possibility as a method of avoiding financial embarrassment. He reiterated the well known fact that State lost money on its home games this year despite the fine attractions on the local gridiron.

The schedule for next year is not complete. Syracuse will be met on foreign soil under a present contract. The Michigan game will be played at Ann Arbor Marquette and Detroit are expected to play here along with Grinnell.

Sacrifice In Spirit

As a result of the conference, however, State may ask for a transfer of the Marquette and Detroit games to foreign fields and abandon temporarily at least its traditional "home-and-home" policy on such major games. Other big time foreign attractions may also be booked.

Young said that State could hardly go through another home schedule on the same basis as this year. Syracuse, Kansas State and Carnegie Tech games each brought less than 7,000 paid admissions.

Young admitted the choice of an all-road schedule will mean a sacrifice in college spirit for financial necessity. He said it would be difficult to build up spirit unless the team plays a reasonable share of its games on the campus here.

A report that Michigan State and Florida might meet in the south in a post-season Christmas day game was set aside by Young. The game was sought but the two teams failed to reach an agreement.

Kentucky's Great Punter Once A Hopeless Cripple

Lexington, Ky. (AP)—A half-dozen years ago Ralph Kercheval was told he would be a cripple, would never be able to walk without the aid of a cane. Today, after three years of football at the University of Kentucky, he is recognized as one of the nation's best kickers.

A broken leg, suffered while he was a high school sophomore, led a physician to predict an inactive future for Kercheval, but the leg mended and Kercheval drove on to become one of Kentucky's greats of all time.

He's a Triple Threat

In 21 games of his varsity career Kercheval has kicked more than 200 times for an average of better than 45 yards. His best single game average was 52 yards against the University of Cincinnati this year.

His longest kick was 78 yards. He has had only two blocked. During his college career he has made good on two of five attempts at field goal and has kicked innumerable points after touchdown, several of which have resulted in victories for the Wildcats. He has booted around 9,000 yards altogether.

CUBS TO GET CHUCK KLEIN?

Philadelphia, Nov. 15 (AP)—In a deal with the St. Louis Cardinals, the Phillies today took another step in their reconstruction work for 1934, while rumor persisted that Chuck Klein, slugging outfielder, would be involved in the next transaction of the local National League club.

The trade, reported since the end of the 1933 campaign, brings Catcher Jimmy Wilson back to this city where he started his rise in the big leagues, and sends Virgil "Spud" Davis, also a backstop, and Eddie Delker, utility infielder, to St. Louis.

Wilson's transfer is the second addition to the Phils' roster made this week. Three days ago, Henry R. Oana, Hawaiian outfielder in the Pacific Coast league, was obtained from Portland for Jimmy McLeod, third baseman, and pitcher Frank Ragland.

Reports about Klein have the Chicago Cubs heading the list as possible destination. Baseball observers say they expect Klein, who led the senior circuit in batting last season, would wear a Cub uniform in 1934, while Babe Herman, another player and some cash, would come to Philadelphia.

The Cards-Phils trade in catchers gives back to each club the backstops they exchanged in 1928 when Wilson was sent to St. Louis and Davis came here with Hurst and Homer Peel.

Wilson at that time had been playing with the Phils five years after his purchase in 1923 from New Haven of the Eastern league where he broke into organized baseball three seasons before. Noted for his ability to handle pitchers, it is understood Wilson will have, as part of his chores here, the development of the young hurlers.

The Cards, in return, are getting back a heavy-hitting young catcher, who finished second to Klein in the 1933 batting race. He has been in organized baseball since 1926 and has played the big league game since 1928.

DISCUSS TRADES

Galveston, Tex., Nov. 15 (AP)—Minor league baseball magnates today heard William G. Bramham, president of the National Association of Baseball Leagues, hail the Shaughnessy pennant playoff plan and "shoestring operators," discussed important player trades and then waited for a report from an executive committee.

The St. Louis Cardinals and the Philadelphia National League club were involved in the principal trade announced.

Arlett Traded

It also was announced that the Phillies had purchased Henry Prince Oana, Hawaiian outfielder, from the Portland club of the Coast league, for players and an unnamed amount of cash. Portland traded John Monroe, second baseman, to Albany of the International league, for Frank Packard, infielder.

Atlanta of the Southern Association bought Art Jacobs, a left handed twirler, from Portland.

"Buzz" Arlett, outfielder, and John Prudhomme, pitcher, went from Baltimore to the Birmingham club of the Southern Association, in exchange for Woodley Hornathy, outfielder, and Bill Lawood, catcher.

The executive committee retired behind closed doors to consider an appeal from Art Shires, Jim Lindsey, Gordon Slade and Charles Wilson, formerly members of the Columbus club of the American Association, who were fined and banned from the circuit last summer for allegedly making false reports concerning salaries. Shires and Lindsey were here personally to present their cases.

John D. Martin, president of the Southern Association, was named to replace Warren C. Giles of Rochester at the hearing on the American Association players. Giles was ineligible because of his connections with the Rochester club, the team with which Shires and Lindsey now are playing.

The executive committee is composed of Giles, J. Alvin Gardner, president of the Texas league, and Dale Gear, president of the Western league. It had before it cases against Harold Meyer, vice president of the Wilkesbarre club of the New York-Pennsylvania league, accused of a salary violation, and against members of the Pine Bluff team of the Dixie league who disbanded when, they asserted, they were not paid for their services.

In College Grid Camps

South Bend, Ind., Nov. 15 (AP)—Snow and cold drove Notre Dame's football squad indoors today for the third straight day, much to Coach Hunk Anderson's disgust. He is afraid the Irish will have to meet Northwestern without a real tough practice under their belts.

Champaign, Ill., Nov. 15 (AP)—Illinois drilled again today on a defense against Chicago plays, with special emphasis on a method of halting Pete Zimmer, who scored against the Illini in the first few minutes of last year's game. Bart Cummings and Dave Cook were given a long drill on place kicking.

Lafayette, Ind., Nov. 15 (AP)—The Purdue passing attack that worked against Notre Dame was polished in practice tonight as an offensive threat to be used in the game with Iowa Saturday. Fred Hecker, Duane Purvis and Jim Carter all tossed long and short passes in the drill.

Bloomington, Ind., Nov. 15 (AP)—The reserves received their share of attention in the Indiana university football camp today as the coaches sought capable defense replacements to use against Xavier university. While the first string eleven worked on smoothing its offense, the reserves got a long defensive drill.

Columbus, O., Nov. 15, (AP)—A varsity-freshman scrimmage with upper classmen on the offense, featured today's grid workout at Ohio State University preparing for Saturday invasion of Wisconsin. The lone touchdown on the ice-covered field came an a pass from Frank Fisch to Ted Rosequist, netting 30 yards. After the scrimmage the squad saw motion pictures of Wisconsin plays.

Iowa City, Ia., Nov. 15 (AP)—The Iowa football squad received its only hard workout of the week today as Coach Ossie Solem took them outdoors for a long offensive and defensive drill.

Minneapolis, Nov. 15 (AP)—Another little brown jug crusade, involving a Minnesota defiance of Michigan's reputation takes 33 Gophers away from home Thursday night for apparently the best Maroon and Gold chance to snare the Wolverines since 1927.

Madison, Wis., Nov. 15 (AP)—Coach Spears revised the Wisconsin defense today and it produced marked results when pitted against the frosh eleven in scrimmage. The yearlings, using Ohio State plays, were stopped effectively in both the running and aerial game.

Lincoln, Neb., Nov. 15 (AP)—Twenty six Nebraska Cornhuskers crammed today's workout with drill on how to stop Pittsburgh and polishing up a brand new offensive to use at the smoky city Saturday.

Evanston, Ill., Nov. 15 (AP)—Northwestern's Wildcats engaged in a long offensive scrimmage today, seeking to generate enough punch to do some scoring against Notre Dame Saturday. The drill was held in Patten gymiasium.

Chicago, Nov. 15 (AP)—The freshmen failed to come close to stopping Chicago's regulars today in a stiff scrimmage session. Ed Cullen remained a quarterback and probably will direct the Maroons in their attempt to score their first Big Ten victory at the expense of Illinois Saturday. The yearlings gave a demonstration of Illinois formations, walking through plays as the varsity looked on.

Alabama Tackle Comes By Giant Size Honestly

Tuscaloosa, Ala., (AP)—Bill Lee tips the scales at 215 pounds and is rated the biggest man on the Alabama football squad, but his family wonders why he never "grew up" like his kinsmen.

His father, who is sheriff of Green county, Alabama, weighs 345 and local tradition has it that he has never learned his own strength.

And then there's Bill's brother who weighs 225 pounds. The neighbors refer to him as "stronger than a mule."

Bill wants to be a sheriff like his dad but the family thinks he will have to take on a little weight.

Pro Football Is Marquette Captains' Game

Pinehurst, N. C., Nov. 15 (AP)—Paul Runyan and Willie MacFarlane, who teamed to take first money in the pro best ball event, shared top place in the individual play with Joe Turnesa as the mid-south open golf championship wound up today in a triple tie for the second successive year.

The three pros, all from the metropolitan New York district, tied at 143 for the 36 holes and split the prize money for first, second and third places, taking $250 each.

Kirkwood Erratic

Turnesa, most consistent of the golfing Turnesa brothers of Elmsford, N. Y., was the only player in the field of 130 to break par, shaving two strokes off it with a morning round of 69. He slipped to 74 in the afternoon, however, getting six on par-four home hole, and Runyan, who fired 72 on his first round, caught him with a par round of 71.

Joe Kirkwood, of Chicago, started out by holing a mashie niblick shot at the third for an eagle deuce. He then roared on through 12 holes, playing them four under par. But he became erratic, winding up with 71 for the opening round and taking 75 in the afternoon for 146.

By winning the pro best ball yesterday and tieing for first place today, Runyan and MacFarlane got the major share of $2,300 in prize money offered for the two day's play. Their 132 best ball score brought them $500. Runyan was also top money winner in the national open at Washington which inaugurated the winter's play.

Henry Picard, of Charleston, S. C.; Al Houghton, of Washington, and Al Watrous, of Chicago, who tied for first place last year, all fell this morning.

George Rudness Trying Out For Basketball Team

While at Negaunee, Rudness played basketball with the high school team four years and was a member of the squad that won the Class B championship in 1930. He is a brother of Edward V. Rudness, Escanaba.

BY PAUL MICKELSON
(Associated Press Sports Writer)

Chicago, Nov. 15 (AP)—Bones may be cracked and stretchers called in when the Minnesota-Michigan steamrollers of football collide at Ann Arbor Saturday, but you can count on "Pug" Lund to stick in the battle.

He's the iron man of the Big Ten football wars this season. A break here and there can't stop him.

The flashy Minnesota back has played 340 out of a possible 360 minutes, going the full route against Indiana, Purdue, Pittsburgh and Northwestern, and all but 10 minutes in each of the South Dakota and Iowa games after a Gopher victory was assured. But that performance isn't half the story. The other part is his courage.

Display of Courage

In his first game against South Dakota in 1932, "Pug" discovered that one of his front teeth was broken off. The nerve was exposed and the pain must have been sereve enough to make any football player call for time—that is, all except the "Pugger." He countered by carrying the ball on six straight plays, then he hesitated just long enough to yank the tooth out.

Banged up ankles, bruised ribs and tackles that would make the average type of player fold up for the day have seemed to add only that much more impetus to his drives for Minnesota points.

Everyone at Minnesota was "Mister" to the shy, ruddy faced blonde when he first came into the Gopher camp from Rice Lake, Wis., and said he'd like to try out for the team. Although he wasn't a big fellow with his 5 feet 10 height and 175 pounds, he has developed quickly into one of the great gridiron stars of the northland. His dashes and quick, accurate kicks will be something for the undefeated Wolverines to worry about when they try to stem the Gopher tide and march on to their second straight Big Ten title Saturday.

Windsor Bulldogs Grab First Place

Windsor, Ont., Nov. 15 (AP)—The Windsor Bulldogs went into a tie for first place for the International Hockey league tonight by overwhelming the London Tecumsehs 6 to 0. The victory was the most one-sided recorded in the leaogue so far and the damage was all done in less than five minutes of play in the second period.

Windsor took a 1-0 lead in the first frame when Russell Blinco tallied on a pass from Whitey Fields. The same combination started the scoring in 13:28 of the second period. A minute later fields scored, then Frank Steele, Andy Bellemer and Harold Starr whipped in goals at short intervals.

Their battle Nov. 18 at Ann Arbor with the mighty Michigan team will climax an extended period of exposure to practice field and newspaper "riding."

It dates back to the scoreless tie with Northwestern in which the Wildcats dragged the Gophers down into a slough of miscues that gave what little glory there was to the former.

So the Michigan game, on which may hinge the Big Ten championship, will at least give the young Gophers a chance to get out of range of the sarcastic coaches.

Nobody seems to give the outfit much credit for beating Iowa and Pitt, along with South Dakota State, because they've suffered three ties; first with the mediocre Indiana eleven, then with the potentially great Purdue squad, and lastly with the tumbling Wildcats.

And considering the record of recent Michigan-Minnesota encounters which is crowded with games lost by narrow margins to the Wolverines, the outlook is none too good fr a counterirritant.

INJURED STARS ARE IMPROVING

Wolverines Work Out in Yost Field House; Fear Passes

The Wolverines are being prepared to shoot the works against the Gophers, and all efforts of the coaching staff are being centered about bringing the squad to a playing form like that shown against Ohio.

The Michigan line is considered strong enough to deal with the thundering herd, even with Pug Lund in the lineup, so the chief worry is to bring the Michigan offensive to a scoring pitch and to develop a pass defense to cope with the Gopher overhead game. The Northmen are expected to resort to passing any time the ball gets inside the 35-yard line.

Both backs and linemen today were given more drill in blocking, followed by a rehearsal of the hundred or more plays from which Quarterback Bill Renner may select to carry out the Michigan attack.

Ottey Leads A Strong Spartan Harrier Team

East Lansing, Mich., (AP)—Michigan State, the Middle-West's annual threat to Eastern supremacy in cross country, is sending another great harrier squad to New York Nov. 20 to compete in the national collegiate championship.

Heading the Michigan State team will be Thomas C. Ottey, the blond Philadelphian who has captured all honors in Middle-West competition again this year. It will be Ottey's second appearance at historic Van Cortlandt Park. He took a third last year in the national meet.

Ran in Olympics

Ottey will invade the East with a great season behind him. He has finished first in two successive dual meets with Michigan and Notre Dame. The closest any runner has been to his flying heels at the finish was 300 yards.

Ottey will be remembered as the American 10,000-meter champion. He placed ninth in the Olympic meet at Los Angeles, falling behind his sturdier European competitors.

Three more Spartans are likely to finish up in the money in the eastern meet. They are Otto Pongrace, veteran half mile ace at State; and the newcomers, John Hammer and Edward Bechtold. Walter Hertzler and Charles Dennis complete the State team.

Michigan State's bid for the team championship will be the third since 1929. The Spartans captured the individual title in 1930 when Clark Chamberlain finished ahead of the field. Chamberlain was second the following year.

State placed second in team competition in 1929 when Lauren P. Brown, the present Spartan cross-country coach, ran third and Chamberlain fourth. Ted Willmarth was eighth the same year. Brown's team last year rated fourth in team honors.

Ottey may recapture the individual title that Chamberlain formerly held for Michigan State. The rangy Spartan underwent a major operation last spring that threatened to put him off his cross-country stride, but recovered his old form before mid-season this year.

Escanaba Gridiron Team Has Balance, Report Discloses

The Escanaba high school football season netted a profit of $357.78 in 1933, according to the athletic association report filed yesterday by Harry Henkin, athletic association treasurer, and Donald Norval, student activities fund treasurer.

The financial report is considered particularly encouraging in view of the fact that many upper peninsula schools reported deficits for the football season just closed. The report also proved that Escanaba is a good football town as profits were made on home games, whereas many upper peninsula schools have decided to seek most of their games away from home for next year because their home games failed to make expenses this season.

The Eskymos played six of their seven games at home and that they were able to finish the season with a sizeable surplus in spite of inclement weather conditions Saturday after Saturday is considered particularly noteworthy.

Nahma Opens Cage Schedule Friday

Nahma, Nov. 15, (Special)—Friday night the Nahma cagers will be given their initial test against the Cooks high school. The sawmill town has one of its best teams in the history of the school, and are facing a tough schedule.

The team consists of only one letter man from last year, but at present the team works like a bunch of veterans. In a practice tilt, the high school defeated the alumni 23 to 26, overcoming the sharp shooting of Ranguette, former Nahma star. The lineup against Cooks is Lambert and Bedard, forwards, Druding and Hebert, guards, and Bradish center.

SPARTANS WILL TRAVEL IN '34

Home Schedules Failed to Receive Enough Support

East Lansing, Nov. 15 (AP)—Although Michigan State's first string returned to football activity here today, plans for the 1934 gridiron campaign commanded major interest.

The possibility was seen that the Spartans may take to the rails next year to play most if not all of their major games on the road. It cropped out of a conference between members of the coaching staf and Ralph H. Young, director of athletics.

Young frankly presented the possibility as a method of avoiding financial embarrassment. He reiterated the well known fact that State lost money on its home games this year despite the fine attractions on the local gridiron.

The schedule for next year is not complete. Syracuse will be met on foreign soil under a present contract. The Michigan game will be played at Ann Arbor. Marquette and Detroit are expected to play here along with Grinnell.

As a result of the conference, however, State may ask for a transfer of the Marquette and Detroit games to foreign fields and abandon temporarily at least its traditional "home-and-home" policy on such major games. Other big time foreign attractions may also be booked.

Young said that State could hardly go through another home schedule on the same basis as this year. Syracuse, Kansas State and Carnegie Tech games each brought less than 7,000 paid admissions.

Young admitted the choice of an all-road schedule will mean a sacrifice in college spirit for financial necessity. He said it would be difficult to build up spirit unless the team plays a reasonable share of its games on the campus here.

A report that Michigan State and Florida might meet in the south in a post-season Christmas day game was set aside by Young. The game was sought but the two teams failed to reach an agreement.

BOOK RENTAL PLAN ADOPTED

Public Schools to Put in New System Next Semester

A textbook rental plan will go into effect in the Escanaba public schools at the beginning of the second semester, the board of education has decided as a means of relieving this financial burden on parents.

Under the arrangement, a student will be charged 25 per cent of the cost price for the use of books for the year. It is estimated that the life of textbooks are four years. An accounting system will be set up, and in the event of unwarranted damage done to the school property certain fines will be imposed.

May Buy Own Books

The plan is optional, however. Those parents who desire to purchase books outright for their own possession will be allowed to do so. The students also will be allowed to turn in their textbooks, which they now own, and receive the use of books of proportionate value, for the first year.

It is planned also to allow parents to pay the year's rental fee in two semester installments. Full details of the new system, however, will be announced later.

Gymnasium Rental Fees

The board of education also has fixed a new rental schedule for school gymnasiums and auditoriums as follows: Senior high school auditorium, from 7 to 10 p. m., $10; senior high school gymnasium, 7 to 10 p. m., with heat, lights, janitor, etc., $2.50; Webster gymnasium, 7 to 9 p. m., with heat, etc., $3.50; without heat, $1.50; junior high school gymnasium, $5.

Supt. R. E. Cheney also reported that tuition collected from outside districts sending students to the Escanaba schools now totals $4,835.87.

BRIDGE WINNERS

New York, Nov. 14 (AP)—The team of Frank Rendon, Benjamin Feuer, Sidney Rusinow and Phil Abramsohn today won the Vanderbilt cup for the team of four championship in contract bridge.

Pleads Not Guilty

Iron River—Magloire Labelle of this city, a former prize fighter, entered a defiant plea of "not guilty—and I mean it," when arraigned yesterday morning before Judge Frank Bell in circuit court on charges of assault with intent to do great bodily harm less than murder upon the person of the aged Rev. Fr. James Lenhart, former pastor of St. Agnes church here.

His trial, the last on the court calendar, will not start until early next week. After two lawyers refused to defend Labelle, Atty. Fred Murphy finally accepted appointment by the judge.

Employes Who Do Not Get Full NRA Wage Can Collect

Detroit, Nov. 14 (AP)—A ruling of the common pleas court today held that employes who do not receive the minimum wage provided under employer agreements with the NRA or president's re-employment agreement may collect the amount of the deficiency.

The ruling, by Judge Gerald W. Groat, was in the case of Alex Rush, of Van Dyke, Mich. Rush was awarded $70.80 from Bert Somers, for whom he said he worked in a barbecue stand. Somers was ordered to pay $2 costs.

Rush claimed he was employed August 29 by Somers, who, he said, signed the restaurant code which provided for a minimum wage of 28 cents an hour under the NRA and obtained a blue eagle. He said Somers discharged him on October 10, when he had worked 384 hours, and had been paid 9½ cents an hour for 320 hours and 11 cents for 64 hours. He sued for the balance under the 28 cents an hour minimum.

Judge Groat gave Rush a judgment for the full amount.

AUTO LICENSE SALE STARTED

8,000 Passenger, Trailer and Commercial Tags Received

Low numbers were going fast at Escanaba Wednesday as the sale of 1934 automobile license plates started at the local department of state branch office in the Wolverine garage building. George Harvey, license agent, reported nearly 100 pairs of the new tags already issued, including passenger, commercial and trailer registrations.

The first passenger car license went to Algot Gustafson of Perkins, and Coleman Nee of Escanaba secured the first commercial plates. The license plates this year are a deep yellow, with black numerals and lettering. Serial numbers assigned to Delta county are much the same as last year, except that the county has a consignment of 100 "V" series numbers in addition to the regular Delta county "D" series. The latter runs from 1 to 451 and then jumps into the thousand series, the intervening allotment being issued to Dickinson county.

The supply received for Delta county includes 6,000 passenger, 1,000 commercial and 1,000 trailer licenses.

Yellow Journalism Held Moral Evil

The danger of journalism which plays up crime and scandal for circulation purposes is not so much that of suggesting crime to potential offenders as that of putting newspapers of little social responsibility into the position of working with and dictating to the judges, prosecutors and police who should be unhampered in defending the public welfare, declared Malcolm Bingay, editorial director of the Detroit Free Press, speaking on "Crime and Racketeering" at the University of Michigan Press Club.

It is too common in American journalism, especially in the large cities, for editors to have an unwritten understanding with political figures connected with crime control which means that "you furnish up with headlines to boost our circulation and we will furnish you with the publicity necessary for your re-election," said Mr. Bingay. "The result is a court room turned into a Hollywood circus, defeating the prestige and public confidence which the courts should enjoy."

Contrasting the British papers with those of this country, Mr. Bingay predicted that the American press would retain its standard of "moral responsibility" in reporting the news fully, accurately and at the proper time, without exaggeration, and will cease "making the news to suit the circulation desires of the paper." The papers which really influence the public mind most do not find it necessary to resort to scarehead tactics and the American press in general would have a higher place if the editor were allowed to be a sober gatherer of news and critic of events, "keeping the circulation manager in the alley, if necessary," Mr. Bingay stated.

Ore Shipping Near End for Escanaba

Three ore boats were due at the Escanaba docks last night in the windup of the iron ore movement for 1933. The Lebanon, Negaunee and Hill are the last carriers on the schedule at Escanaba, and their departure may be delayed if severe weather conditions on the lakes continue.

The steamer Hill was first and last on the ore shipping schedule here last season.

1934 OUTLOOK BRIGHT

Iron ore shipments for the 1934 season will probably reach a figure of 30,000,000 tons, a 50 per cent increase over the shipping season now drawing to a close, according to estimates compiled by Skillings' Mining Review.

"These figures are based," the Review says, "on the estimate of a prominent steel man, who has pegged the Great Northern railway to move 7,500,000 tons in 1934. On that basis the total for the Lake Superior district should run about 30,000,000 tons. The Great Northern has for years averaged about 25 per cent of the total movement of iron ore. This estimate appears to be conservative. There will be no unusual surplus of iron ore on Lake Erie docks and in furnace yards next spring."

There was a time, the Review continues, when shipments of 10,000,000 tons were considered excellent. Later, during the rush periods, shipments of 60,000,000 tons were known. It is expected that the return of the steel business to normal conditions will bring regular shipments of about 40,000,000 or 50,000,000 tons yearly.

No great surplus of ore, piled up during the depression, will delay the reaction of the mining business to improved conditions in steel production, the Review says.

BOOK RENTAL PLAN ADOPTED

Public Schools to Put in New System Next Semester

A textbook rental plan will go into effect in the Escanaba public schools at the beginning of the second semester, the board of education has decided as a means of relieving this financial burden on parents.

Under the arrangement, a student will be charged 25 per cent of the cost price for the use of books for the year. It is estimated that the life of textbooks are four years. An accounting system will be set up, and in the event of unwarranted damage done to the school property certain fines will be imposed.

May Buy Own Books

The plan is optional, however. Those parents who desire to purchase books outright for their own possession will be allowed to do so. The students also will be allowed to turn in their textbooks, which they now own, and receive the use of books of proportionate value, for the first year.

It is planned also to allow parents to pay the year's rental fee in two semester installments. Full details of the new system, however, will be announced later.

Gymnasium Rental Fees

The board of education also has fixed a new rental schedule for school gymnasiums and auditoriums as follows: Senior high school auditorium, from 7 to 10 p. m., $10; senior high school gymnasium, 7 to 10 p. m., with heat, lights, janitor, etc., $2.50; Webster gymnasium, 7 to 9 p. m., with heat, etc., $3.50; without heat, $1.50; junior high school gymnasium, $5.

Supt. R. E. Cheney also reported that tuition collected from outside districts sending students to the Escanaba schools now totals $4,835.87.

Los Angeles, Nov. 14 (AP)—Another "marrying Mdivani," Prince Serge of the Soviet province of Georgia, "struck out" in the American matrimonial game today.

He was divorced by Mary McCormick, opera singer.

Serge did not show up in court. This is his second "strikeout." He married Pola Negri, film actress, in 1925, but she divorced him in Paris in 1931.

Jauntily attired, Miss McCormick took the stand today and told the judge her marriage was "a noble experiment, but it didn't work out."

Resinol Healed It
"When my little Betty was two months old, she began to suffer from a skin trouble on her neck which lasted several months. It was very sore and itched constantly. I tried many recommended treatments, but nothing seemed to help. Finally I bought a jar of Resinol Ointment and a cake of Resinol Soap. In a short time her neck was very much improved, and it was amazing to see how quickly it healed." (Signed)—Mrs. F. A.*

Phillies Trade Davis to Cardinals for Wilson

CUBS TO GET CHUCK KLEIN?

Philadelphia, Nov. 15 (AP)—In a deal with the St. Louis Cardinals, the Phillies today took another step in their reconstruction work for 1934, while rumor persisted that Chuck Klein, slugging outfielder, would be involved in the next transaction of the local National League club.

The trade, reported since the end of the 1933 campaign, brings Catcher Jimmy Wilson back to this city where he started his rise in the big leagues, and sends Virgil "Spud" Davis, also a backstop, and Eddie Delker, utility infielder, to St. Louis.

Wilson's transfer is the second addition to the Phils' roster made this week. Three days ago, Henry R. Oana, Hawaiian outfielder in the Pacific Coast league, was obtained from Portland for Jimmy McLeod, third baseman, and pitcher Frank Ragland.

Reports about Klein have the Chicago Cubs heading the list as its possible destination. Baseball observers say they expect Klein, who led the senior circuit in batting last season, would wear a Cub uniform in 1934, while Babe Herman, another player and some cash, would come to Philadelphia.

The Cards-Phils trade in catchers gives back to each club the backstops they exchanged in 1928 when Wilson was sent to St. Louis and Davis came here with Hurst and Homer Peel.

Wilson at that time had been playing with the Phils five years after his purchase in 1923 from New Haven of the Eastern league where he broke into organized baseball three seasons before. Noted for his ability to handle pitchers, it is understood Wilson will have, as part of his chores here, the development of the young hurlers.

The Cards, in return, are getting back a heavy-hitting young catcher, who finished second to Klein in the 1933 batting race. He has been in organized baseball since 1926 and has played the big league game since 1928.

DISCUSS TRADES

Galveston, Tex., Nov. 15 (AP)—Minor league baseball magnates today heard William G. Bramham, president of the National Association of Baseball Leagues, hail the Shaughnessy pennant playoff plan and "shoestring operators," discussed important player trades and then waited for a report from an executive committee.

The St. Louis Cardinals and the Philadelphia National League club were involved in the principal trade announced.

Arlett Traded

It also was announced that the Phillies had purchased Henry Prince Oana, Hawaiian outfielder, from the Portland club of the Coast league, for players and an unnamed amount of cash. Portland traded John Monroe, second baseman, to Albany of the International league, for Frank Packard, infielder.

Atlanta of the Southern Association bought Art Jacobs, a left handed twirler, from Portland.

"Buzz" Arlett, outfielder, and John Prudhomme, pitcher, went from Baltimore to the Birmingham club of the Southern Association, in exchange for Woodley Hernathy, outfielder, and Bill Lee wood, catcher.

The executive committee retired behind closed doors to consider an appeal from Art Shires, Jim Lindsey, Gordon Slade and Charles Wilson, formerly members of the Columbus club of the American Association, who were fined and banned from the circuit last summer for allegedly making false reports concerning salaries.

John D. Martin, president of the Southern Association, was named to replace Warren C. Giles of Rochester at the hearing on the American Association players. Giles was ineligible because of his connections with the Rochester club, the team with which Shires and Lindsey now are playing.

The executive committee is composed of Giles, J. Alvin Gardner, president of the Texas league, and Dale Gear, president of the Western league. It had before it cases against Harold Meyer, vice president of the Wilkesbarre club of the New York-Pennsylvania league, accused of a salary violation, and against members of the Pine Bluff team of the Dixie league who disbanded when, they asserted, they were not paid for their services.

In College Grid Camps

South Bend, Ind., Nov. 15 (AP)—Snow and cold drove Notre Dame's football squad indoors today for the third straight day, much to Coach Hunk Anderson's disgust. He is afraid the Irish will have to meet Northwestern without a real tough practice under their belts.

Champaign, Ill., Nov. 15 (AP)—Illinois drilled again today on a defense against Chicago plays, with special emphasis on a method of halting Pete Zimmer, who scored against the Illini in the first few minutes of last year's game. Bart Cummings and Dave Cook were given a long drill on place kicking.

Lafayette, Ind., Nov. 15 (AP)—The Purdue passing attack that worked against Notre Dame was polished in practice tonight as an offensive threat to be used in the game with Iowa Saturday. Fred Hecker, Duane Purvis and Jim Carter all tossed long and short passes in the drill.

Bloomington, Ind., Nov. 15 (AP)—The reserves received their share of attention in the Indiana university football camp today as the coaches sought capable defense replacements to use against Xavier university. While the first string eleven worked on smoothing its offense, the reserves got a long defensive drill.

Columbus, O., Nov. 15, (AP)—A varsity-freshman scrimmage with upper classmen on the offense, featured today's grid workout at Ohio State University preparing for Saturday invasion of Wisconsin. The lone touchdown on the ice-covered field came an a pass from Frank Fisch to Ted Rosequist, netting 30 yards. After the scrimmage the squad saw motion pictures of Wisconsin plays.

Iowa City, Ia., Nov. 15 (AP)—The Iowa football squad received its only hard workout of the week today as Coach Ossie Solem took them outdoors for a long offensive and defensive drill.

Minneapolis, Nov. 15 (AP)—Another little brown jug crusade, involving a Minnesota defiance of Michigan's reputation takes 33 Gophers away from home Thursday night for apparently the best Maroon and Gold chance to snare the Wolverines since 1927.

Madison, Wis., Nov. 15 (AP)—Coach Spears revised the Wisconsin defense today and it produced marked results when pitted against the frosh eleven in scrimmage. The yearlings, using Ohio State plays, were stopped effectively in both the running and aerial game.

Lincoln, Neb., Nov. 15 (AP)—Twenty six Nebraska Cornhuskers crammed today's workout with drill on how to stop Pittsburgh and polishing up a brand new offensive to use at the smoky city Saturday.

Evanston, Ill., Nov. 15 (AP)—Northwestern's Wildcats engaged in a long offensive scrimmage today, seeking to generate enough punch to do some scoring against Notre Dame Saturday. The drill was held in Patten gymiasium.

Chicago, Nov. 15 (AP)—The freshmen failed to come close to stopping Chicago's regulars today in a stiff scrimmage session. Ed Cullen remained a quarterback and probably will direct the Maroons in their attempt to score their first Big Ten victory at the expense of Illinois Saturday. The yearlings gave a demonstration of Illinois formations, walking through plays as the varsity looked on.

Alabama Tackle Comes By Giant Size Honestly

Tuscaloosa, Ala., (AP)—Bill Lee tips the scales at 215 pounds and is rated the biggest man on the Alabama football squad, but his family wonders why he never "grew up" like his kinsmen.

His father, who is sheriff of Green county, Alabama, weighs 345 and local tradition has it that he has never learned his own strength.

And then there's Bill's brother who weighs 225 pounds. The neighbors refer to him as "stronger than a mule."

Bill wants to be a sheriff like his dad but the family thinks he will have to take on a little weight.

Pro Football Is Marquette Captains' Game

Pinehurst, N. C., Nov. 15 (AP)—Paul Runyan and Willie MacFarlane, who teamed to take first money in the pro best ball event, shared top place in the individual play with Joe Turnesa as the mid-south open golf championship wound up today in a triple tie for the second successive year.

The three pros, all from the metropolitan New York district, tied at 143 for the 36 holes and split the prize money for first, second and third places, taking $250 each.

Kirkwood Erratic

Turnesa, most consistent of the golfing Turnesa brothers of Elmsford, N. Y., was the only player in the field of 130 to break par, shaving two strokes off it with a morning round of 69. He slipped to 74 in the afternoon, however, getting six on par-four home hole, and Runyan, who fired 72 on his first round, caught him with a par round of 71.

Joe Kirkwood, of Chicago, started out by holing a mashie niblick shot at the third for an eagle deuce. He then roared on through 12 holes, playing them four under par. But he became erratic, winding up with 71 for the opening round and taking 75 in the afternoon for 146.

By winning the pro best ball yesterday and tieing for first place today, Runyan and MacFarlane got the major share of $2,300 in prize money offered for the two day's play. Their 132 best ball score brought them $500. Runyan was also top money winner in the national open at Washington which inaugurated the winter's play.

Henry Picard, of Charleston, S. C.; Al Houghton, of Washington, and Al Watrous, of Chicago, who tied for first place last year, all fell this morning.

George Rudness Trying Out For Basketball Team

While at Negaunee, Rudness played basketball with the high school team four years and was a member of the squad that won the Class B championship in 1930. He is a brother of Edward V. Rudness, Escanaba.

The boat used by duck hunters to avoid alarming the game is known as a Barnegat sneak box.

BY PAUL MICKELSON
(Associated Press Sports Writer)

Chicago, Nov. 15 (AP)—Bones may be cracked and stretchers called in when the Minnesota-Michigan steamrollers of football collide at Ann Arbor Saturday, but you can count on "Pug" Lund to stick in the battle.

He's the iron man of the Big Ten football wars this season. A break here and there can't stop him.

The flashy Minnesota back has played 340 out of a possible 360 minutes, going the full route against Indiana, Purdue, Pittsburgh and Northwestern, and all but 10 minutes in each of the South Dakota and Iowa games after a Gopher victory was assured. But that performance isn't half the story. The other part is his courage.

Display of Courage

In his first game against South Dakota in 1932, "Pug" discovered that one of his front teeth was broken off. The nerve was exposed and the pain must have been sereve enough to make any football player call for time—that is, all except the "Pugger." He countered by carrying the ball on six straight plays, then he hesitated just long enough to yank the tooth out.

Banged up ankles, bruised ribs and tackles that would make the average type of player fold up for the day have seemed to add only that much more impetus to his drives for Minnesota points.

Everyone at Minnesota was "Mister' to the shy, ruddy faced blonde when he first came into the Gopher camp from Rice Lake, Wis., and said he'd like to try out for the team. Although he wasn't a big fellow with his 5 feet 10 height and 175 pounds, he has developed quickly into one of the great gridiron stars of the northland. His dashes and quick, accurate kicks will be something for the undefeated Wolverines to worry about when they try to stem the Gopher tide and march on to their second straight Big Ten title Saturday.

recent Michigan-Minnesota encounters which is crowded with games lost by narrow margins to the Wolverines, the outlook is none too good fr a counter-irritant.

Windsor Bulldogs Grab First Place

Windsor, Ont., Nov. 15 (AP)—The Windsor Bulldogs went into a tie for first place for the International Hockey league tonight by overwhelming the London Tecumsehs 6 to 0. The victory was the most one-sided recorded in the leaogue so far and the damage was all done in less than five minutes of play in the second period.

Windsor took a 1-0 lead in the first frame when Russell Blinco tallied on a pass from Whitey Fields. The same combination started the scoring in 13:28 of the second period. A minute later Fields scored, then Frank Steele, Andy Bellemer and Harold Starr whipped in goals at short intervals.

Their battle Nov. 18 at Ann Arbor with the mighty Michigan team will climax an extended period of exposure to practice field and newspaper "riding."

It dates back to the scoreless tie with Northwestern in which the Wildcats dragged the Gophers down into a slough of miscues that gave what little glory there was to the former.

So the Michigan game, on which may hinge the Big Ten championship, will at least give the young Gophers a chance to get out of range of the sarcastic coaches.

Nobody seems to give the outfit much credit for beating Iowa and Pitt, along with South Dakota State, because they've suffered three ties; first with the mediocre Indiana eleven, then with the potentially great Purdue squad, and lastly with the fumbling Wildcats.

Wolverines Work Out in Yost Field House; Fear Passes

The Wolverines are being prepared to shoot the works against the Gophers, and all efforts of the coaching staff are being centered about bringing the squad to a playing form like that shown against Ohio.

The Michigan line is considered strong enough to deal with the thundering herd, even with Pug Lund in the lineup, so the chief worry is to bring the Michigan offensive to a scoring pitch and to develop a pass defense to cope with the Gopher overhead game. The Northmen are expected to resort to passing any time the ball gets inside the 35-yard line.

Both backs and linemen today were given more drill in blocking, followed by a rehearsal of the hundred or more plays from which Quarterback Bill Renner may select to carry out the Michigan attack.

Ottey Leads A Strong Spartan Harrier Team

East Lansing, Mich., (AP)—Michigan State, the Middle-West's annual threat to Eastern supremacy in cross country, is sending another great harrier squad to New York Nov. 20 to compete in the national collegiate championship.

Heading the Michigan State team will be Thomas C. Ottey, the blond Philadelphian who has captured all honors in Middle-West competition again this year. It will be Ottey's second appearance at historic Van Cortlandt Park. He took a third last year in the national meet.

Ran In Olympics

Ottey will invade the East with a great season behind him. He has finished first in two successive dual meets with Michigan and Notre Dame. The closest any runner has been to his flying heels at the finish was 300 yards.

Ottey will be remembered as the American 10,000-meter champion. He placed ninth in the Olympic meet at Los Angeles, falling behind his sturdier European competitors.

Three more Spartans are likely to finish up in the money in the eastern meet. They are Otto Pongrace, veteran half mile ace at State; and the newcomers, John Hammer and Edward Bechtold. Walter Hertzler and Charles Dennis complete the State team.

Michigan State's bid for the team championship will be the third since 1929. The Spartans captured the individual title in 1930 when Clark Chamberlain finished ahead of the field. Chamberlain was second the following year.

State placed second in team competition in 1929 when Lauren P. Brown, the present Spartan cross-country coach, ran third and Chamberlain fourth. Ted Willmarth was eighth the same year. Brown's team last year rated fourth in team honors.

Ottey may recapture the individual title that Chamberlain formerly held for Michigan State. The rangy Spartan underwent a major operation last spring that threatened to put him off his cross-country stride, but recovered his old form before mid-season this year.

BOWLING NOTES

Escanaba Gridiron Team Has Balance, Report Discloses

The Escanaba high school football season netted a profit of $357.78 in 1933, according to the athletic association report filed yesterday by Harry Henkin, athletic association treasurer, and Donald Norval, student activities fund treasurer.

The financial report is considered particularly encouraging in view of the fact that many upper peninsula schools reported deficits for the football season just closed. The report also proved that Escanaba is a good football town as profits were made on home games, whereas many upper peninsula schools have decided to seek most of their games away from home for next year because their home games failed to make expenses this season.

The Eskymos played six of their seven games at home and that they were able to finish the season with a sizeable surplus in spite of inclement weather conditions Saturday after Saturday is considered particularly noteworthy.

Nahma Opens Cage Schedule Friday

Nahma, Nov. 15, (Special)—Friday night the Nahma cagers will be given their initial test against the Cooks high school. The sawmill town has one of its best teams in the history of the school, and are facing a tough schedule.

The team consists of only one letter man from last year, but at present the team works like a bunch of veterans. In a practice tilt, the high school defeated the alumni 23 to 26, overcoming the sharp shooting of Ranguette, former Nahma star. The lineup against Cooks is Lambert and Bedard, forwards, Druding and Hebert, guards, and Bradish, center.

SPARTANS WILL TRAVEL IN '34

Home Schedules Failed to Receive Enough Support

East Lansing, Nov. 15 (AP)—Although Michigan State's first string returned to football activity here today, plans for the 1934 gridiron campaign commanded major interest.

The possibility was seen that the Spartans may take to the rails next year to play most if not all of their major games on the road. It cropped out of a conference between members of the coaching staf and Ralph H. Young, director of athletics.

Young frankly presented the possibility as a method of avoiding financial embarrassment. He reiterated the well known fact that State lost money on its home games this year despite the fine attractions on the local gridiron.

The schedule for next year is not complete. Syracuse will be met on foreign soil under a present contract. The Michigan game will be played at Ann Arbor. Marquette and Detroit are expected to play here along with Grinnell.

Sacrifice In Spirit

As a result of the conference, however, State may ask for a transfer of the Marquette and Detroit games to foreign fields and abandon temporarily at least its traditional "home-and-home" policy on such major games. Other big time foreign attractions may also be booked.

Young said that State could hardly go through another home schedule on the same basis as this year. Syracuse, Kansas State, and Carnegie Tech games each brought less than 7,000 paid admissions.

Young admitted the choice of an all-road schedule will mean a sacrifice in college spirit for financial necessity. He said it would be difficult to build up spirit unless the team plays a reasonable share of its games on the campus here.

A report that Michigan State and Florida might meet in the south in a post-season Christmas day game was set aside by Young. The game was sought but the two teams failed to reach an agreement.

Kentucky's Great Punter Once A Hopeless Cripple

Lexington, Ky. (AP)—A half-dozen years ago Ralph Kercheval was told he would be a cripple, would never be able to walk without the aid of a cane. Today, after three years of football at the University of Kentucky, he is recognized as one of the nation's best kickers.

A broken leg, suffered while he was a high school sophomore, led a physician to predict an inactive future for Kercheval, but the leg mended and Kercheval drove on to become one of Kentucky's greats of all time.

He's a Triple Threat

Known primarily as a kicker, this 190-pound, six-foot senior has developed into a crack passer, runner and signal caller. He directs the team from fullback position.

In 21 games of his varsity career, Kercheval has kicked more than 200 times for an average of better than 45 yards. His best single game average was 52 yards against the University of Cincinnati this year.

His longest kick was 78 yards. He has had only two blocked. During his college career he has made good on two of five attempts at field goal and has kicked innumerable points after touchdown, several of which have resulted in victories for the Wildcats. He has booted around 9,000 yards altogether.
